It seems regrettable, then, that a little leeway couldn't be taken by these same patriots when it comes to preserving the "safety of the nation" when war again is openly talked and envisioned.

RENT CONTROL:

Soon to Go?

Federal rent controls soon would be a thing of the past, if a particular action of congress could be construed as an indication—and it was so construed by everyone in Washington

CONGRESS gave the President a broad hint that there may not be any rent controls after June 30, when it sent to him a money bill that included funds earmarked to pay off employees of the rent control agency.

The senate completed legislative action on the measure—a 783 million dollar deficiency bill—to provide extra money for various federal agencies for the year ending in June.

INCLUDED in the measure was four million dollars for the office of housing expediter Tighe E. Woods. Of that amount, more than two and one-half million was to be used to pay for the terminal leave of employees. The other 1.25 was for operating expenses for which Woods had asked 3.6 millions.

LEOPOLD:

Storm & Strife

The future appeared rugged for ex-King Leopold of Belgium and almost as rugged and surely as uncertain for his troubled country. The fight to restore Leopold to the Belgian throne, which he abdicated when the German hordes overran Belgium, had become a bitter one.

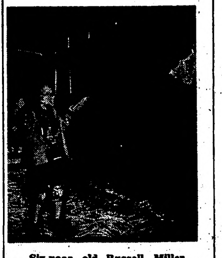
Easter Seal Child



Six-year old Russell Miller, Columbus, Ohio, the 1950 Easter Seal Child selected by the National Society for Crippled Children and Adults, feeds a horse on a neighbor's farm. Russell, has had cerebral palsy since birth.

EASTER SEALS:

Help a Child

The generosity of the American people during the 1950 Easter Seal campaign, which ends April 9, will help bring new life and hope to many crippled children.

SIX-YEAR-OLD Russell Miller knows that, as does his family, for Russell, who has had cerebral palsy since birth, is now able to start walking by himself—because of the help and treatment he received through the auspices of the National Society for Crippled Children and Adults. He was chosen the "Easter Seal Boy for 1950" because he typifies the thousands of crippled children who have been similarly helped through this organization.

RUSSELL is a handsome boy, with bright and friendly eyes. He is eager to learn and does everyday chores, despite his handicap. At home he is an accepted member of the family and does not expect or receive any special privileges.

But, if it were not for the guidance of medical specialists, the determination of his mother that he would walk and play again like other children, specialized care and other Easter Seal services he received. Russell's resulting rapid progress certainly would never have taken place.

The American people were reminded that during the Easter Seal sale, no job and no contribution would be too small to do its share in helping crippled children walk again.

PRESIDENCY:

All Aboard!

President Truman was getting ready to hit the trail again with his gospel of the need for electing and reelecting Democrats. It was believed his spring and fall campaign tour would match the intensity of his 31,500-mile "give-'em-hell" campaign of 1948.

PLANS were for Mr. Truman to hit the road early in May for a rear-platform speaking swing that would carry him into Washington state about May 11 for the dedication of Grand Coulee dam. It would wind up with a "fighting political talk" in Chicago stadium the night of May 15 at a giant Democratic rally.

The trip will include "off-the-cuff" talks to crowds around the railroad tracks to and from the west coast, and plugs for Democratic candidates and Fair Deal measures.

For the fall campaigning, an even longer, more intensive tour is being planned, for then the President will go into a score or more of states to slug it out for Democratic congressional candidates.

MR. TRUMAN'S amazing success at this type of political warfare is the chief reason, surely, why he has decided to engage in it again. Admittedly no orator, the President, nevertheless, did sufficiently well for himself in the 1948 campaign to make it seem logically good strategy to pursue similar tactics this time.

FIRST AID TO THE AILING HOUSE

BY ROGER C. WHITMAN

QUESTION: We have white painted woodwork, which is quite a problem to keep clean, because of my small children. I would like to change this finish to a varnished effect, to get a natural wood finish. It is no pleasure trying to keep white woodwork really white with many little hands around. Please advise.

ANSWER: It will not be very easy to remove the paint completely, which should be done in order to apply varnish. If you can rent or buy a small portable electric sander it would save time in taking off the paint. If you cannot get one, soften the paint with paint remover and then scrape it off with scrapers, rough cloths and steel wool. Follow by thorough cleaning off with turpentine, for not a trace of the remover should remain to spoil the new finish. If you work in the kitchen, be sure to get a non-inflammable type of paint remover because of fire hazard. You may need to do some sandpapering to get a smooth clean surface. After wiping off the dust, apply a coat of quick-drying varnish. When this is dry, sand lightly and dust off, then follow with the final coat.

Household Hints

When preparing both the yolks and whites of eggs for a recipe, time, work, water and egg may be saved by beating the whites first and then, with the unwashed beater, the yolks.

Brown spots that inevitably show up on glass baking dishes may be removed by sprinkling baking soda in the dish, filling it with hot water and letting soak for about 10 minutes.

With cut glass back in vogue, here's a cleaning tip: Tackle the dust that's collected in all the crevices with a baking-soda paste and a stiff brush.

A down-to-earth suggestion from Blue Earth

Johnson

"Already the cry has gone out—let's raise the iron ore tax," writes M. A. Johnson, editor of the Blue Earth Post. "Taxation within the state has been levied the 'easy way', taxing as much as the traffic will bear. Lack of correction has taken industries to other states. Before we increase iron ore taxes . . . let Minnesota study our precarious tax situation."

YOU COULDN'T PICK a better time to study up on the iron ore tax situation, Mr. Johnson. A new mining era lies just ahead.

True, much of Minnesota's open-pit iron ore is gone. But in addition to the remaining high-grade ore, we have incalculable billions of tons of low-grade and taconite ores.

These lower-quality ores must be used, along with the high-grade ore, to keep Minnesota in the mining picture. If they're used in a big way, it can mean big things for the state.

It can mean more jobs. Because extracting the iron from low-grade and taconite ores is a complex manufacturing operation, more manpower will be needed. Example: it will take twice as many men to fill an oreboat with taconite concentrate, as against ore from an open-pit mine.

Manufacturing ore can also mean more years of payroll revenues for Minnesota labor, more income for our railroads, more business for our merchants, more demand for the produce of our farmers.

Yes, we can help bring this to pass—by treating our mining industry as fairly as we treat other industries.

And yet, right now, some people are proposing new iron ore legislation which would tend to discourage the producers from investing a maximum amount to develop low-grade and taconite ores. Does this make sense?

Fair treatment would make sense. Fair treatment would help Minnesota's iron ore industry compete with the taconite and low-grade ores of other states and the high-grade ores of other countries. It would help give Minnesota a bigger ore industry than it has ever known before.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

Program of Tagging Deer Being Carried on Under Supervision of Refuge Manager

Thirty-six (36) deer were trapped, weighed and tagged on the Mud Lake National Wildlife Refuge during the period January 1 to March 15, 1950. Mud Lake Refuge is a Federal wildlife refuge of 60,000 acres located in Marshall Co. Minnesota. A total of 88 deer have been tagged and weighed since trapping operations were commenced in 1947.

Live-weight records provide an accurate method of determining how the deer are wintering and tag returns give accurate information on movement of the refuge deer, growth of individual animals, longevity, etc.

Some of the refuge deer tend to remain pretty much within the vicinity of the refuge area from one year to another, while others leave the refuge and have been shot as far as 60 miles from refuge boundaries.

One buck fawn was tagged on January 6, 1949, weighing in at 85 pounds (liveweight). He was shot during the open season, November 12-16, near Lake Bronson and weighed 145 pounds (hog-dressed), while carrying a set of antlers with six points. This is most unusual, but the report has been verified.

The month of January was abnormally cold (accompanied with deep snow) and refuge deer lost some weight, although they were still able to move about enough to obtain browse. Checks on mortality to-date indicate no more than a normal winter loss of small fawns and the great majority of the refuge herd of 800-900 deer wintered very well. A total of 770 acres covered on foot has revealed not a single adult deer dying in the period January 1 to April 1. Extensive areas of willows provide the major source of winter food for both the Mud Lake deer and the 31 moose now using the area.

Otter Tales

By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

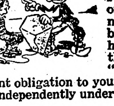
I ran into my grand dad, "Eager Beaver" Kilowatt, up at the Devils Lake power plant last week. ("Eager Beaver" is pretty old, so they gave him an inside job.) "Hear you been havin' some trouble," he says. "Hear they had you flat on your back March 6 and 7."

So I told grand dad all about it . . . how the worst wind and sleet storm since 1932 came blasting out of the polar regions, and in just a few hours practically ripped 1400 poles right out of the ground and tore thousands of dollars in lines to worthless shreds. "I hear an awful lot of good Otter Tail customers went without lights and power for quite a spell," "Eager Beaver" said, "on account of that storm."

When he saw me look embarrassed, he patted me on the shoulder. "Don't take it so hard, Reddy. Everybody's sorry that it happened—but nobody can control wind and sleet anymore than they can control the course of the sun."

Well, I guess "Eager Beaver" is right. There are some things man can't control. Small boys, for instance, are sometimes a problem. Especially in kite flying season. There's only one danger connected with that—a kite can get tangled up with a power line. Old Reddy's had enough trouble for a long while, so, folks, please protect the kiddies by not letting them fly kites near electric power lines.



NEVER FLY KITES NEAR ELECTRIC WIRES!
O.K. REDDY!

One of the pleasant things I like to report on each year is the annual convention of the North Dakota Press Association. This year it's in Fargo, April 14 and 15. (If the editor of this paper asked you to get your news and ads in early this week, it's because he wanted to attend.) Your home-town weekly or daily paper is the backbone of America's precious "free press." Its editor fulfills an important obligation to your community because he thinks and acts independently under a system of free enterprise.

Now for the "commercial." (I have to get it in somewhere, folks!) Are you troubled, during spring months, with just having luke warm water to wash and bathe with? Well, for a mighty small cost for my service, you can have all the HOT water you need, the year around. Just ask your dealer about an ELECTRIC hot water heater.

WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR . . .

by HOMER CROY

A prodigal son of northwest Missouri, Homer Croy drove along a country road amid the scenes of his youth. As he revisits familiar places, he remembers happy times with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he'd ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; the children, Ida, Lucy and Harriet. He remembers the shows that brought people from miles around swooping down on their little town—the Harvest Home Show, the Street Fair, the Pure Bred Show, the Short Horn Show. He remembers how, with Newt's secret help, Anton Delinsky, the "foreigner," won himself a blue ribbon—and a new American suit—for his entry in the Corn Carnival. Then there were the medicine shows. . . .

CHAPTER XIII

Then suddenly the fun-making doctor would grow serious and tell us about what he called his "sovereign" remedy, and would read from the label the diseases it would help. We didn't believe all he said; but we believed some of it must be true. So we bought his medicine, especially when it was at what he called his "introductory offer" of half price

This quack was hardly ever on our streets any more. Sometimes during a carnival he would be there; but he did not sell much.

A new kind appeared among us. He was what we called the "traveling doctor." He would advertise in our paper that he would arrive on a certain date and would stay at the hotel for a certain number of days. Our doctors were not well dressed; in fact, they took pride in being what we called "simple and unassuming in dress." But the traveling doctor was a very different type. He was the most impressive, the most elegant individual, we had ever seen. He did not wear a show-off silk hat, as the street quacks had done, but wore the latest and most fashionable high-crowned derby. He had a long-tailed cutaway coat, striped trousers, cloth-topped shoes and an ascot tie. In the center of the tie was a pearl pin which, we believed, had cost a fortune. Also he carried a cane and wore expensive yellow chamois gloves turned impressively back on his hands.

He always came to our best hotel; in the window, on an advertising placard, would be a picture of him, and after his name would be the degrees he held. We never knew what the letters meant, but they were impressive. On the placard was a space to be filled in with the hours he would be "available for personal consultation." He always had his meals served in his rooms at what we heard was a fearful expense.

On Sunday he went to the leading church, sat down front and gave liberally. After church, while the farmers were still in town, he would walk slowly up and down the square, past the farmers getting into their rigs.

Suddenly and dramatically a traveling doctor entered our lives. Mrs. Delinsky, who had never been sick, became ill. It was as if she were ashamed of being ill and did not want to go to a town doctor who would be there all the time and know about her weakness, so she chose a traveling doctor who was just arriving. It was arranged for Ida to take her.

What a moment it must have been for the two when they arrived at the hotel and went up the stairway to "the doctor's soot." And how heart-thumping it must have been when the impressive doctor received them. And how his eyes must have lingered on Ida. Anyway, Mrs. Delinsky was to take the medicine he gave her and was to come back tomorrow.

Ida took her back the next day and again his glance lingered on Ida who was pleased that such an important person would show interest in her.

He wanted to see Mrs. Delinsky again, he said. This time Dr. Ellzer got a moment alone with Ida. "It's too bad you haven't anything the matter with you! Will you stay and have dinner with me tonight?"

Ida was flattered and delighted, but could not accept, for that would be too bold—and there was Mrs. Delinsky who must be taken home.

But Ida could not get the doctor's interest in her out of her mind; and the next day she went back again. He had to move on to his next town, but she began to receive letters. She became secretive. She would go to the box herself, to meet the carrier, then walk slowly to the house reading her letter.

Spellbound, Ida Leaves Home

Newt began to worry. "Ida, I wouldn't encourage him. His interest isn't on the healthy side."

"If he wants to write to me, I'm going to answer him."

Tension developed; one after another of the family tried to influence her, but without result. The elegant doctor had made too deep an impression.

The climax came when she announced she was going to the town where he was in order to "doctor" for a pain in her side and dizzy spells. The family was stunned and tried to persuade her out of the idea, but the more they said the more set she became. If she must go, she would go with her, her mother said. But Ida did not want her mother to go with her. She would go alone.

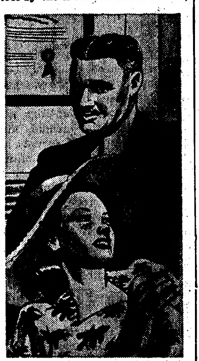
The foolish girl, carried away by the spell of the fashionable doctor, made Newt and her mother take her to the depot where she stood, beside her suitcase, looking down the track in the direction the train was coming from. Hope fluttered in Newt's heart . . . maybe at the last moment. . . . He began to use tones and gestures and intonations which he employed in their moments of understanding. She was touched, a tear came. But the spell was too deep. In a few minutes Newt and Mrs. Kennedy were standing on the wooden platform looking after the train as it sped away. Finally they turned and started for home.

They expected a letter, but it didn't come; and now indeed the family did worry. Finally Newt said: "I'm going down there and see what I can do."

But what could he do? Instead of helping, he might make matters worse. He drove to town, left his horse and buggy at the North Star, and started to the depot, carrying his old shiny valise. Then mounted the very train Ida had left on.

Although Gallatin was only seventy miles away, he had never been there in his life, so little at this time did farmers travel.

The train finally came to a standstill, the conductor picked up the stool by the little slot in the middle, placed it on the platform and Newt stepped down with his valise. He walked up the street, suddenly feeling very far from home, glancing here and there, hoping to see Ida.



"It's too bad you haven't anything the matter with you! Will you stay and have dinner with me tonight?"

He knew he was right, when he arrived before the best hotel, for in the window was the same placard with the dates filled in in ink. Should he wait, hoping Ida would come along?

There was a rubber runner leading from the door to the clerk's desk; here and there were worn spots; and in orderly rows were brass cuspidors.

Newt's Mission Looks Hopeless

He walked down the runner and paused before the important-seeming clerk who was scratching away.

When he finished, the clerk stuck the pen in a bowl of shot and said, "Yes?" without even glancing at Newt.

"Is the doctor in," then ingratiatingly added, "please?"

The clerk jerked his thumb over his shoulder, still not bothering to look at Newt. "Up the stairway, then to the left."

Newt felt more self-conscious than ever when he saw what seemed to him to be a very elegant room, with lights burning in the daytime. The furniture was upholstered and, to him, it represented fashion; and so did the pictures on the walls.

Half a dozen people—mostly women—were in the room and as Newt came in, they smiled and one made a place for him. A religious fervor hung over them; they told each other about their diseases and spoke in awed, hushed tones of "the doctor" who was going to take away their troubles.

There was a click; instantly all talk stopped and the people gazed expectantly, hopefully—almost hypnotically toward the door. A woman came out, her face radiant, as she kept murmuring, "Yes, Doctor; yes, Doctor."

The doctor's eyes swept over the office. He gave a start, but only for an instant, for the poised, exquisite gentleman with the dapper mustache was too thoroughly in control of himself to be upset. He knew people; especially he knew how to handle country people who were never sure of themselves.

"Do you want to see Ida?"

He must not make the doctor mad; must act just right. "Yes, I do." Then added, "That's what I came for."

The doctor was studying him—each movement—each inflection. He took a pad from his pocket and wrote. "That's where she's staying. Who's next?"

A woman sprang up. "I am!"

"Come in, please."

"Yes, Doctor."

The door closed.

Newt found himself on the street, a little dazed by the speed with which things had happened and growing more and more apprehensive. How could he stand against this important, confident man of the world?

A sign in the window said, "Furnished Rooms." The grass in the yard was dry and withered and hard-packed. On the porch were rickety chairs and a swing.

He went to the door. There was a wooden bell-push, but the contact piece was gone so that the whole thing looked like a dead sunken eye.

"I came to see my daughter, Miss Ida Kennedy," he said politely.

He creaked up the stairs, his heart thumping. Before he got there, Ida opened the door.

He did not try to kiss her, for he had not kissed her in years.

There was a rocking chair and an upright chair. He sat down in the light, uncertain rocking chair, holding his hat in his hand and looked at her uneasily. "I guess you know what I came for Ida?"

She nodded—this girl who didn't seem like his own. "I guess I do."

"Are you coming back with me?"

"No."

There was a painful silence. "I'll put my hat on the bed, I guess." He pitched it over, then rocked a few times; in his heart was an ache such as he had never known before.

"I'm going to ask you why, Ida."

"I'm still doctoring."

"Do you figure to be through soon?"

"I don't know."

He asked, as guardedly as he could, just how she was doctoring. She went every day, she said, and took the medicine he prescribed. In the evening he hired a team and they drove into the country. "He talks so wonderfully. I never knew anybody who talked so nicely, and he's so lovely to me." Her eyes glowed.

He moved uneasily. "We've got some pretty fine boys back home, Ida. Good farmers, all round dependable boys."

Now he must ask the question. The question that troubled him so deeply and profoundly.

"Have you done anything that would hurt your Ma?"

She was silent so long it seemed to him he couldn't stand it. "No."

"You wouldn't mislead me, would you, Ida?"

She shook her head firmly. "I don't lie, Pa. I never have."

He gazed at her, a very warm pounding in his heart. "That's true, Ida. That's one reason I esteem you so."

It was as if a crisis had been safely passed. He talked of his train trip, crops down here were not as far advanced as he'd expected. He began to speak of home and home news—maybe that would cast her mind homeward.

"Do you think you could come home with me, Ida? Your mother is pretty much upset."

"I'm sorry, but I'm not coming."

It was a long, heartbreaking moment before he could speak. "I'd hoped to get better news, Ida."

They talked of other things; but always the conversation got back to the subject that concerned them both so deeply. Finally he stood up and reached for his hat. "I just don't know what to do, Ida. I just don't," he repeated.

What should he do? What could he do? Nothing—nothing in all the world—it seemed to him. But he must do something. Must come drivin' up with Ida sittin' beside him.

He went to the short order; his kind, here, farmers and plain people like himself. As he ate, an idea worked itself out in his head. He would go to the doctor's "soot" where the two of them could be alone.

Newt Meets 'The Doctor'

As he walked down the street, he thought over what he would say and what the doctor would say. Then what he himself would say. Little by little he would win the doctor over.

As he reached the hotel, a team came swinging up with a tinkling of harness. He looked with interest, as he did at all teams, and knew instantly it was livery. Usually livery stables did not have good horses, but this was a fine, high-stepping pair. The driver pulled in to the curbing.

"You've got a nice pair there," said Newt.

The driver glanced at Newt with approval. "It's the best livery team in town! In fact, it's more than that. It's the boss' private driving team. He gets extra."

"If you don't mind me asking, how much do you get for a team like that?" But that was being pretty forward. "Y'see, I'm a stranger here. Live up the line."

"I don't mind telling you. Two dollars an hour!"

"Whew!" A man and a work team would get only five dollars a day.

There was a sound behind him and when Newt turned, the doctor was coming out of the door. And now Newt understood.

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

LATTIMORE:

"Pure Moonshine"

Owen Lattimore, mustachioed, mild-mannered United Nations employee, was the big news of the Communist expose which Senator Joseph McCarthy had instigated and of which the highlight was MaCarthy's charge that Lattimore was Russia's top spy in the United States and that he was in the employ of the U.S. state department.

IN AFGHANISTAN on a U. N. mission, Lattimore when informed of the charge, cabled a press association that McCarthy's "rantings" were "pure moonshine."

It appeared that McCarthy was out on the shakiest limb of his political life. Loudly asserting that he would base his entire case against the state department, which he charges was infiltrated with Communists, on the truth or falsity of the Lattimore case, the senator appeared to be off on the wrong foot at the start.

Lattimore was working for the U.N., not the state department. He had not been connected with them for five years, the state department said. His lawyers hung a libel suit threat on McCarthy, contending that when McCarthy named Lattimore as the "top Red spy" in a private session with newsmen, he was outside senatorial immunity.

LATTIMORE expressed pleasure that McCarthy was basing his whole case upon him for, he said, when he returned to Washington and testified, McCarthy would "fall flat on his face."

Meanwhile, there was much controversy over whether FBI files should be opened to the committee studying McCarthy's charges. McCarthy contended the proof he needed were in these files and in other confidential files. FBI Chief J. Edgar Hoover argued that the files should not be open because of the bad effect it might have on "many innocent people" and the fact that it would destroy FBI usefulness in many ways.

BRITAIN:

Less Buying

Great Britain, stipulating many "ifs," planned to cut purchases from the United States and other dollar countries by as much as 25 per cen in the period from July 1, 1950 to June 30, 1951. By this action, the government hoped to cut its annual gold-dollar deficit in half by mid-1951.

THE DESIRED GOAL could be reached only under the following conditions, the government said:

1. Continued good business in the United States.
2. The lid is kept on wages, prices and dividends in Britain.
3. British productivity goes on improving with no sharp increases in costs.
4. Exports to dollar markets increase sufficiently to offset the cut in the value of the pound last September for $4.03 to $2.80.
5. Gold-earning exports to South Africa can be stepped up.
6. THE DOLLAR NATIONS demonstrate readiness to accept imports and to invest capital in non-dollar areas.

JAPAN:

Treaty Urged

With Gen. Douglas MacArthur and U.S. roving Ambassador Philip Jessup agreed on the desirability of the move, strong pressure was building up inside the Truman administration for an early peace treaty with Japan.

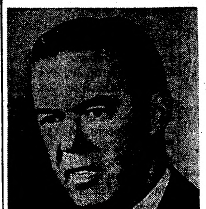
THERE is conflict on the issue. It is a group principally within the state department which seeks an early treaty, while many others believe that the treaty project should be shelved in order to prolong indefinitely the present American control.

Added strength was given the treaty proponents when Great Britain urged months ago that a treaty should be completed.

AS might be expected, the Russians had to put their oar in. Moscow insists that there be a big power veto over all treaty terms, but the trend in Washington seems to be for the western powers to proceed by themselves if Russia should refuse to join in under acceptable conditions.

The Japanese treaty is seen by proponents as one line of action the United States could take to strengthen its position in that quarter of the globe.

Named to AEC



Thomas E. Murray, mechanical engineer who holds more than 200 patents and is an important figure in the auto and banking worlds, has been named by President Truman to succeed David E. Lilienthal on the U.S. atomic energy commission.

DEFENSE:

How Adequate?

The people, themselves, would have to decide who was right in the controversy on how adequate are our national defenses in the event of another war.

Two highly important gentlemen in the defense setup had disagreed on the status of American defense strength.

General Dwight D. Eisenhower, supreme commander of Allied forces in World War II, had declared publicly that he feared United States defenses had "fallen below the danger point."

THE GENERAL'S REMARK stirred a wave of apprehension in many quarters and set some congressmen on a road which may lead to another look at military budget paring.

But, Louis Johnson, U.S. defense secretary, didn't agree with General Eisenhower. After a long conference with President Truman, he emerged to assert that our national defenses are "sufficient . . . unto the needs of the moment."

Just what Mr. Johnson meant by that was not clear, but it was quickly apparent that there could be read into the statement a conclusion that we are safe "at the moment" because no war has been declared. But those jumping to conclusion would immediately query: "How sufficient are these defenses at some other moment—say in the next six months, or next year—if war should come?"

JOHNSON SAID he had not discussed the situation with Eisenhower since the general's statement concerning defense and declined to discuss specific quotations from the Eisenhower speech. Asserting that he was in no "controversy with Ike," he pointed out that the present defense budget was put together by the joint chiefs of staff, Eisenhower is chairman.

General Eisenhower has been asked to tell congress what he thinks of the current defense setup and Johnson said: "When he appears before congress I don't want it to appear that I talked with him and tried to influence him in any way."

NEW 'BRAIN':

Great Things

Factory workers may become obsolete in the future if a new mechanical brain—resembling a pinball machine on a jackpot rampage—will do what its inventor claims it will.

THE DEVICE, described as capable of operating an entire factory without human aid, is designated officially as the magnetic-drum-digital-differential analyzer. The inventor, 31-year-old Floyd Steele, calls it Maddida for short. What Maddida can do was demonstrated at the opening of a three-day conference on computing machinery at Rutgers university.

Steele, who is also an aeronautical engineer at Manhattan Beach, Cal., said the machine was the forerunner of the completely automatic factory—where goods will be produced without help from the human hand or the human brain.

SQUEEZE PLAY

Reds Knock U.S. Dollar Down to 4 Rubles

The Russians had come up with an economic squeeze play, and the U.S. was vigorous in its protests. Moscow had set a new 4-to-1 ruble exchange for the American dollar. The United States charged the new exchange rate was "completely unjustified."

A note delivered in Moscow demanded that the former exchange rate of 8 rubles for $1 granted to the American embassy be restored.

Moscow served notice last in February that, effective July 1, the U.S. embassy would have to pay $1 for four rubles. The effect of this, U.S. officials said, would be to increase the cost of operating the embassy by nearly a million dollars a year. While not a too-important development, the action was another aggravation.

It has a water capacity, with all basins filled of 1,500,000 gallons and during major displays uses 14,000 to 15,700 gallons a minute. The central jet is forced skyward 135 feet above the lower basin. 45,000,000 candlepower is required for lighting.

What can Minnesota do about its climate?

Pearson

"There can be no local nor area economic future in Minnesota without a strong iron ore mining industry," writes Burt D. Pearson, editor of the Mesabi Daily News. "The future is rooted in making huge stores of low-grade ores merchantable, and to this end untold millions of dollars will be spent. But more encouragement must come from the people—and it must be evidenced in a more congenial political and economic climate."

YES, MR. PEARSON, we really ought to do something about our "climate." We ought to do it now. Let's see why . . .

Minnesota's hoard of high-grade ore has been melting fast in recent years. To make the remainder last, we've got to turn to low-grade and taconite ores. This is true conservation—and everybody's for it.

But not everybody knows what a job it is to produce lower-quality ores. These ores contain more waste material than iron. What iron there is has to be wrung out by complex—and mighty costly—MANUFACTURING methods.

Before one ton of manufactured ore is produced, millions must be invested in elaborate new "ore factories." For instance, a single taconite plant can cost $75 million.

This kind of money doesn't grow on trees. Once invested, it would take some 25 years to get it back. Yet the present producers WANT to invest it if Minnesota will give them an even break. First they must know that their industry will be treated like other Minnesota industry—that stable tax policies will prevail—that present and future investments will not be saddled with unreasonable burdens.

As you may know, the iron ore industry has meant much to Minnesota—in jobs, in state and local taxes, in money for the state trust funds. Over $139 million of Minnesota's $180 million trust funds came from iron ore. Income from this money goes to every school district in the state.

Minnesota can do quite a lot about its climate, Mr. Pearson. If the state wants a thriving, expanding ore industry—with all it means in jobs, payrolls and tax revenues—let's make sure the industry gets fair treatment.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Gabby Enjoys Going to The Dentist

One of my molars was giving me a bad time Tuesday afternoon, so I slipped over to Doc Jones, hoping to catch him free. When I arrived, Gabby Jackson was sitting there reading a magazine. I said hello to Gabby and he nodded.

Doc comes out and says I'm next. "Wait a minute," I says. (My tooth seemed to have stopped aching.) "How about Gabby—doesn't he have an appointment?" Doc smiles and says, "Gabby? Why, he's got the finest teeth in the county. He just comes up here and reads the magazines whenever he's in town!"

As Doc went to work he told me that he's glad to have Gabby come up and read magazines . . . they might not all be fresh off the newsstand, but if Gabby—or anyone wants to while away some time who is he to stand in their way?

From where I sit, this "live and let live" spirit helps make America what it is. If I prefer a friendly glass of beer with my supper and you prefer milk—who's to say one's right and the other wrong?

Douglas Fir

Lumber cut from the same tree or log of Douglas fir consists of several classes of grades suitable for a variety of purposes. The inner part of the log will usually be tight-knotted although coarse-grained, while finer-grained material is found toward the outer edges. In larger, older logs the tight-knotted center area may be surrounded with a layer of lumber with black or loose knots which eventually give way to a layer of clear wood.

Dead End

WHILE THE TRAIN was waiting on a side track in Georgia, one of the passengers walked over to a cabin near the track, in front of which sat a cracker dog, howling. The passenger asked a native why the dog was howling.

"Hookworm," said the native. "He's lazy."

"But," said the stranger, "is hookworm so painful?"

"Nope," responded the talkative native.

"Why, then, should the dog howl?"

"Jes' lazy."

"But why does laziness make him howl?"

"Wal," said the Georgian, "thet blame fool dawg is settin' on a sandburr, an' he's too tarnation lazy to git off, an' he jes' sets thar an' howls 'cause it hurts."

Twin Souls

A girl asked an old bachelor whether he had been disappointed in love.

"No, I never was exactly disappointed in love," he replied. "I was more what you might call discouraged. You see, when I was very young I became very much enamored of a young lady of my acquaintance; I was mortally afraid to tell her of my feeling, but at last I screwed up my courage to the proposing point. I said, 'Let's get married.'

"And she said, 'Good Lord! Who'd have us!'"

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U. S. Defense Setup Challenged; Progress Reported in ECA Field; Truman Signs Crop Increase Act

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

DEFENSE:

Charges Hurled

Charges that the government has been "ragging its feet" in organizing civil defense against an A-bomb attack and in telling Americans how to protect themselves have been hurled by four big-city officials.

MAYOR Elmer E. Robinson of San Francisco minced no words in asserting that federal authorities have "fumbled the ball" of civilian defense. He urged that a policy of total defense be inaugurated immediately by the federal government.

Federal planners have said that local officials will have to assume primary responsibility for civilian defense against atomic warfare, the government's role being that of coordinator.

THAT MUST have seemed an odd stand to take to officials who have no knowledge of atomic bomb effects or of the first steps to take toward protection if such bombings occur. Surely public leaders were within the bonds of reason and logic when they demanded that the government channel to them more information on how to provide protection against atomic warfare—information which only the federal government possesses, if anyone or any group does possess it.

The government's attitude seemed a callous one and hard to reconcile with all the scare techinques prevalent in connection with the possibility of another war in which the A-bomb or the H-bomb would be the most frightful weapons.

FOREIGN AID:

Some Progress

As the economic cooperation administration started its third year of operations, Marshall plan countries were being urged to take two steps of paramount importance to make themselves independent of extraordinary outside aid by the time ECA ends in June of 1952.

COUNTRIES participating in the Marshall plan were to be told that they should intensify efforts to sell more products to the United States and other hard-currency areas. ECA pointed to that as one means of closing the dollar gap.

In that connection, the agency continued, the U.S. could assist by following increasingly liberal import policies and commercial policies generally so that trade barriers do not prevent European countries from increasing dollar earnings in this country.

AS to European economic unification, ECA stated its belief that the establishment of an effective European payments union is of great importance. Elimination of public and private trade restrictions also were said to be a contributing factor to economic unification.

As a result of increased production and financial and political stabilization, ECA said, communism has been placed on the defensive in all participating countries.

HOGS:

No Props

For the first time within the past eight years, hogs were being bought and sold at major U.S. markets without any price supports—and dealers admitted it was difficult to note any difference.

PRICES were steady to 25 cents higher. What did that mean? Was it an indication that federal agricultural planners could have been wrong all these years? If that were the case, there' probably would be no admission of it.

In fact, one U.S. department of agriculture spokesman hailed the event as a "normal market." It was "just a matter of supply and demand," he said, as if the department had been aware of and had considered that venerable law ever since the government went into the farming business.

FARMERS and traders, however, held varying opinions as to what might happen when the markets opened for the first time since hog price supports were allowed to die. Some felt growers would become panicky and flood the market with hogs. But, as was reported, nothing happened.

Anti-support adherents, nevertheless, could draw little consolation from the evident, for farm leaders had made it clear vigorous efforts would be made to restore hog price props.

SUBMARINES:

But Whose?

Cloaked with all the color and trappings of mystery and suspense was the report that a naval officer had made instrument contact with "one or more" unidentified submarines about 17 miles off the California coast.

OFFICIALLY, the western sea frontier, which ordered the hunt, reported "results and comment negative." It added the search had been discontinued.

'Hot' Shirt

Defense Secretary Louis Johnson (right) talks "cold war" in a "hot" shirt as he and President Truman discuss defense strategy and anti-Communist activities at the "little White House" in Key West, Fla. Secretary Johnson's shirt recalls the "Solomon-in-all-his glory" quotation, but even it was topped by one the President frequently donned for pictures.

CROP BOOST:

A Compromise

In any manner likely to affect the farm vote—with the congressional elections not so many months away—President Truman showed an unwonted disposition to compromise, rather than come out fighting against anything he didn't like, as he has done so frequently in the past.

THE PRESIDENT compromised on an agricultural bill raising acreage limitations on cotton and peanuts for 1950 and modifying price supports for Irish potatoes next year.

In signing the measure after long study, the President noted, according to the presidential press secretary, Charles G. Ross, that "the good features outweighed the undesirable features." And with that profound utterance, the bill was signed into law.

The President acted after undergoing heavy pressure from groups urging approval of veto of the joint resolution.

The section affecting potatoes knocks out price supports for potatoes in 1951 unless marketing quotas are then in effect. Additional legislation would be needed, however, to put such quotas into operation in 1951.

THE MEASURE as approved authorizes an increase of 1.5 million acres in cotton acreage this year and a 50 per cent increase in acreage of peanuts planted for oil production. The previous cotton allowance was 27 million acres.

It would permit peanut growers—principally in Texas and Alabama — 100,000 more acres and would permit excess peanuts to be grown for oil without penalties on certain conditions.

JAPAN:

Bible vs. Marx

Believing that Christianity and the Bible are the dykes that are holding up the flood of communism in Japan, the American Bible Society is beginning a campaign to send Bibles to Japan — Bibles printed in the Japanese language.

Already the society has distributed a total of 2,789,956 Bibles among the Japanese, but it is felt—and this sentiment is shared by Gen. Douglas MacArthur, that isn't enough.

GENERAL MacARTHUR isn't alone in that opinion. He has asked for millions more. And Dr. Shiro Murata, an officer of the Japan Bible Society, said: "The eyes of Japan are fixed on two books. One is Das Kapital by Karl Marx. The other is the Holy Bible. Japan is at the crossroads."

To usher in its program of Bibles for the Japanese, the American Bible Society this month is sponsoring a huge signature book of donors for the purpose of raising funds with which to purchase and send the Bibles. Every person who contributes one dollar or more to the project will be asked to sign the donor book.

WHEN the campaign comes to an end, probably this fall, the huge book, bearing the signature of every donor, will be forwarded to Japan where it will be displayed in the offices of the Japan Bible Society as a token of friendship from the people of America to the people of Japan.

Adam's Daughter?

Did Adam have a daughter, no mention of whom is in the Bible?

Dr. Guido Kisch, noted scholar, has declared that a 900-year-old Latin manuscript claims that Adam had a daughter whose name was never mentioned in any version of the Old Testament. Dr. Kisch said the manuscript, oldest and most accurate version known as "Biblical Antiquities," mentioned a daughter named Noaba.

Big Three Bid for Batting Lead

By GRANTLAND RICE

Grantland Rice

A YEAR AGO a brace of outsiders broke in and scrambled up the batting leaderships. They were George Kell of the Tigers and Jackie Robinson of the Dodgers. You could have gotten any price you wanted against them last April. Ralph Kiner took over the home-run crop but Kiner really belonged. He's been the best home-run hitter baseball has known in many years.

But the three who were supposed to lead the double pack barely missed. They were Ted Williams and Joe DiMaggio for the American league and Stan Musial for the National. DiMaggio actually led his league but he wasn't in enough games to draw a count. All three look to be in shape now and this should mean that two of the three should take over the top spot again.

Musial got away badly in 1948 and 1949. He came from .240 last season to .338 but he admits he needs a faster take off. "I wasn't too well in 1948," he says. "I just wasn't hitting in the early part of the 1949 season. Enos Slaughter had the same experience and it was some time before he got going again. I never felt better than I do now so there'll be no reason for another early slump."

If Ted Williams worries about his hitting, he never shows it. He never shows that he has tightened up. Ted has the finest hand-and-wrist action, the best coordination between eyes and hands, I've ever seen. No one else in baseball can wait so long before starting his swing. "Right out of your glove," Bill Dickey says.

DiMaggio's 1949 mark was remarkable, considering his late start and his other ills. But Joe, like Ted and Stan, looks physically ready for a big year. This is also serving notice on Kell and Robinson that both have a battle on before taking over the lead again. A young fellow by the name of Country Slaughter might cut in.

* * *

The Leading Slugger

In the way of distance hitting, Ralph Kiner has left the others buried in a snowdrift. His last three seasons with the Pirates have been years that almost matched Babe Ruth. The 27-year-old outfielder hit 51 home runs in 1947, 40 home runs in 1948 and 54 in 1949.

"I think Babe's mark of 60 is pretty safe," Kiner said in California, a few weeks ago. "You've just got to keep hitting home runs all the time. I hit 20 in the last 30 days and still fell six short last season. You have to get away good to have even a chance to reach 60."

With Johnny Mize not playing too often and Joe DiMaggio getting no younger, the main American league job falls to Ted Williams. Ted blew himself to 43 homers last year, the best big-league mark of his career. Stan Musial had 36 and this Cardinal is another who may make his challenge. But the job of catching Kiner looks to be out of range now.

They were rating Luke Easter, the new Indian slugger, as the one to watch. Easter is a long-distance hitter with tremendous power, but his spring hitting hasn't been any too spectacular. There are more than a few who believe Doby, his teammate, will get more home runs.

Easter is a slugging giant, when he happens to connect. But swinging at big-league pitching for the first time isn't quite as simple as lighting a cigarette.

For all-around power the Red Sox again should be the best hitting team in either league.

Call of the Wild

If you want to pick up any real information about ballplayers and their varying ways, you should seek out veteran scouts. I stumbled over a nest, or covey, containing three of these invaluable assets, either located temporarily here or passing through.

I had just one question to ask—"Why is it that the modern game has so many wild pitchers who have a planet full of stuff but only a vague idea of where the plate is?

by HOMER CROY

A prodigal son of northwest Missouri, Homer Croy drove along a country road amid the scenes of his youth. As he revisits familiar places, he remembers happy times with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he'd ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their children, Ida, Lucy and Harlan. He remembers when the traveling doctor came to town and how, under his spell, Ida followed him to Gallatin, 70 miles away, in order to "doctor" for a pain in her side and dizzy spells. And how Newt finally went to Gallatin to try to persuade his daughter to come home with him. When Ida refused even to tell him what she was "doctoring" for, Newt decided to call upon the doctor.

CHAPTER XIV

"Good evening," said the doctor politely as he proceeded straight to the team. In a moment the other man was out and the doctor was holding the lines in his gloved hands.

"Good evening," repeated Newt, wanting desperately to say something, but taken so by surprise that he could not utter anything. "Listen, Doctor, I want to see you?" Then added from nervous agitation. "That is, if you don't mind. I was just on the way here to see you."

"Certainly," said the doctor pleasantly.

Newt moved uneasily, now not knowing at all what to say. "Listen, Doc," he began, trying to be friendly and informal, "I want you to give up my daughter. I mean, let her get her head and come home with me."

The doctor was getting in and adjusting himself to the seat and arranging the lines. "I'm not keeping her. She can return any moment she wishes." His manner was not quite so pleasant. "She is under my medical care. That is all."

"I—I wish you would," said Newt agonizedly, trying to think of the right thing. "I tell you, Doctor, she's young and foolish."

The doctor gave the lines a flap, the tugs tightened and now Newt had to walk alongside the moving vehicle. "I'm goin' to ask you not to go out with her tonight, Doctor."

"I'm sorry, but she's expecting me," came the sharp, clipped words.

The team moved faster; in a moment it was swinging down the street, leaving Newt gazing after it.

He walked broodingly up and down, stopping to gaze in a window, then going on again. He looked about for a farmer to talk to. But the farmers had gone. Chores.

He saw something which made him stop—a metal gilt sign projecting out from the wall. Chief of Police, it said. He hesitated. Police! The very word had a terrifying sound. Never in his life had he been arrested; never had anyone in his family had police trouble.

In a moment he was inside. He saw a man in shirt sleeves sitting at a desk; the man had on black sleeve protectors and wore a green eyeshade which was held in place by metal ends pressing against his temples. The man watched him silently.

Newt moved closer, growing more and more uneasy . . . maybe he had made a mistake. Finally he said, "Are you the chief himself?"

The man studied him for a moment before he answered. "I am."

A silence.

Newt stood before the desk and the cold boring eyes. "I've got a problem on my hands. I thought maybe you could tell me what to do."

"Well, tell it."

"It concerns my daughter."

"How old is she?"

Newt told him.

"I've got one about that age. Go ahead."

"Well," said the officer when Newt finished, "that is a problem! I can telegraph St. Louis and see if they've got anything. There's a medical association there, but they don't give out very well. You come back in the morning."

There was a long, anxious, bed-tossing night.

"Well," said the officer the next morning "I've got something I expect'll interest you!"

It did, indeed, interest Newt. The doctor was duly licensed, the message said; but the police records showed that he had been sued twice by women for broken promises of marriage. But each time the case had been settled out of court.

We Decorate the Church Christmas Tree

The rest did not take long to happen. But he must not rush too hard at Ida; it'd be quite a shock. And it was indeed. She was defiant; he was not to blame. Besides he was doing her a great deal of good and she meant to stay and doctor with him. Newt was understanding enough to let her take her time. It did take Ida two days to make the decision; meanwhile Newt remained at his hotel, going patiently and cheerfully to see her whenever she would let him and not criticizing or blaming her. Little by little Ida became less headstrong; also the traveling doctor's glamour was wearing off.

Finally she was on the train and finally they arrived at the little wooden sanded home depot. They walked up town to the livery stable and Ida's suitcase and her father's shiny valise were put in the buggy together. He picked up the lines and clucked. It was not long before Newt drove up in front of his house and sitting beside him was Ida, just as he had been hoping.

And now I come to something dramatic. At least it seemed dramatic then; it still does, so deep an impression did it make.

None of our neighbors ever had a Christmas tree at home; it was always at the church. As I set these words down I am again at Wesley Chapel—our white church surrounded by cornfields.

The "young people" always decorated the tree. It meant something indeed, for this day a girl could ask a boy to go with her without setting tongues wagging like a toy celluloid turtle on a pivot. There they are; I can see them. The stepladders and the chairs, the strings of popcorn, the cotton batting. We always let the girls throw the tinsel on top of the tree where it would hang like cornsilk on a roasting ear.

Home to do the chores. At last Newt's sled jingles by and I come out with my soapstone and my manuscript and get in. So much laughter, and such good time . . . my foolish old heart thumps just for me to think about going to the Christmas tree at the church.

In the distance is the church, gleaming and shining, and there at the hitch racks is everyboy's financial standing. Home-made bobsleds for the poor, the young couple just getting a start, the renters, and for people starved out on the hardpan. Big double-rippers for the prosperous.

We walk across the crinkling snow with our lanterns. On the floor, in the vestibule, is a great pile of overshoes, each pair buckled together. Across one wall are half a dozen shelves; and under these are hooks for our coats.

"You come and go home with us," Newt said.

The door opens and our hearts leap at sight of the brightly gleaming lamps along the wall; behind each lamp is a reflector all polished for this, the biggest night in the year.

Now comes the game of trying to get the presents in without the children seeing. Of course, the children see, but no child is going to be fool enough to let it be known.

Tragedy Mars Santa's Visit

Nothing can begin until after the silver offering. God has blessed us, the preacher says, and now is the time for us to remember Him. Two men—one for each aisle—take little flat wicker baskets and walk down the aisle, reaching out the baskets and drawing them back again. Mr. Holt, our rich man, puts in a silver dollar. The benches creak, the children squirm, a tuft of cotton batting falls off the tree. The men bring the offering back, the preacher raises his hands; his voice trembles a little, so sincere and earnest is he. "And now may this offering tonight help carry on God's work. May people all over the world come to know and to love the Christ child whose natal day we celebrate."

"Amen," everyone says softly.

At last, the program begins. I can see the choir now. Yes, I can! I can see Brother Ford, our bass singer, with his high single-ply collar, his necktie slewed around to one side. And I can close my eyes and hear the songs our choir sang. The songs my mother loved to sing. They stir me . . . this moment. "Throw Out the Lifeline, Someone Is Drifting Away," "We Shall Meet on That Golden Shore," "Blessed Assurance"—how much they meant to me.

The recitations begin. It seems to us they are all good. Lucy Kennedy takes one step forward and rests her weight on the ball of her front foot. Suddenly and dramatically she begins to—yes, I knew it—"Bingen on the Rhine." The soldier of the legion is dying again.

Now comes the moment I've been dreading. I walk forward, give a bow as quick as the flick of a jay bird's wing and begin to read aloud the short story I have written. A whispering fit seizes the children. "Mama, what's in that package?" "Mama, when will Santa Claus come?" Old Mrs. Vert has a coughing spell. The janitor gets up, just as I reach the climax of my story, and throws the stove door open with a mighty clang. At last I finish; a hand clapping goes up. As I walk back to my seat, Maude Stark looks up admiringly, Ah!

Newt has been busy out behind the church and now a door opens and there is Santa Claus with binder-twine whiskers and with a pack on his back. As he comes down the aisle he calls the children by name and gives them bags of candy.

Up and down the aisle goes Santa Claus; smaller and smaller grows the pack; orange peels on the floor now and mothers wiping sticky hands. At last the bag is empty and Santa Claus disappears out the door he had come in. In a few minutes he is sitting innocently in the back row.

It is one of the rules that a present must be opened before everybody and held up so that we can all see and enjoy it. The presents are taken off the tree, or pulled out from under it, and passed to the minister who reads the name on the package, then hands the package to the superintendent of the Sunday school who opens it and holds the present up to view.

I tell you it makes a young man feel mighty proud to have a turtle-shell dresser set he's bought for his girl held up so everybody can go "Ohhh!" One of the little boys, who delivers the presents, takes it down the aisle and gives it to the girl it's meant for.

But they are not all fine, dresser set presents. Joke presents, too.

At last it's all over; the presents are distributed, the tree looks as if a cyclone has stripped it; the popcorn loops are crooked and the cotton batting hangs like a billy-goat whiskers.

Delinskys Are Taken Under Kennedy's Wing

Then came the drama I spoke of. Mr. Booth, who lived nearest the church, came running across the churchyard, waving his lantern and shouting. There has been a line call—the Delinsky house is on fire. We stand appalled at the news. It is dreadful enough for a house to burn down any time. But in winter—on Christmas Eve!

In no time at all the people are driving as hard as they can toward the red, ominous glow in the sky. The Delinsky house was not on the public road, as most houses were, but set back at the end of a lane, almost in the middle of the farm, the way poor people lived. The gate was thrown open and down the lane we went. But it is too late; the house is gone. But the stable is saved.

For some reason or other the Delinskys wanted to be by themselves, and so we let them be; they stood in a little group, talking Russian.

At last it was all over; the uneasy horses in the barn had been quieted; and now water from the well was thrown on the last sparks.

"You come and go home with us," Newt said. Some of the neighbors offered to take the children, but Newt said the family should be together, and so it was not long before the Delinsky bobsled was following ours down the road.

Mr. and Mrs. Delinsky still seemed stunned as the baseburner was poked up. Delinsky looked from his wife's face to the faces of his children and we knew what he was thinking—what was going to become of his family?

"Is gone," he said. Why had he ever left Russia? Why had he ever tried to be a farmer? Cursed was anybody who tried to make a living on the soil. He spoke for some moments to Mrs. Delinsky in Russian; then he turned to us, as if suddenly realizing he was not being polite. He had a cousin in Omaha, he said; had a fine little store, growing all the time; cousin want him to come to Omaha and join hands and make a fine big store. Delinsky spoke fiercely. "Only fools try to farm. Anton Delinsky t'rough. No more farm, never."

"Listen, Anton," said Newt, distressed that anyone would want to give up farming, "you don't want to get any foolish ideas in your head. You've had an upset—a pretty bad one—but you've still got your land and that's what counts. An' you're developin' into a pretty good farmer—even if you did go and name a horse for yourself. Who raised that prize ear? I didn't. Look at that suit." Delinsky glanced at it proudly.

"Is goot."

"Of course it is. It's an extremely fine suit—finer than I ever had."

Delinsky nodded.

"Your children are going to school, learnin' to speak correct. We'll pull you out of this. We'll get up a shower for you!"

How to make the cream last longer

Brown

"We have much low-grade ore and that presents a problem," points out Don Brown, editor of the Waseca Journal, in an editorial discussing iron ore taxes. "Minnesota must not get into a position where the cream of the ore deposits has been skimmed off and the mining companies seek better fields. Before we go all out to 'soak' the mining firms, we'd like a lot more information on the subject."

YOU'RE ENTITLED to more information on this subject, Mr. Brown. You might like to know——that ever since 1910 the mining industry has been mixing low-grade ore, or "skimmed milk," with the high-grade ore, or "cream";

—that today there are 54 processing plants in Minnesota turning out one-fourth of the total ore shipped;

—that this proportion can be greatly stepped-up by extensive treatment of low-grade and taconite ores.

But it's important that the iron ore industry not be penalized by heavy taxes on the "cream." Not if we want low-grade and taconite ore development to go full speed ahead.

These lower-quality ores must — in effect — be MANUFACTURED before they're any good to anybody. What'll that cost? Just to build the necessary "taconite factories" may run to hundreds of millions.

Operating these plants will cost a pretty penny, too. You need at least twice as much manpower to fill an ore train with taconite concentrate, compared with open-pit ore.

Can the present producers afford to make the vast investments required to develop our low-grade and taconite ores? They think so. And Minnesota can help them go all-out — help them actually EXPAND operations — by assuring them of reasonable, fair treatment.

Yes, Mr. Brown, the iron ore industry is in favor of making the cream last. A stable state tax policy will encourage them to do just that.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

If tractors sold for $5.95, someone -- the manufacturer, the wholesaler or your local implement dealer -- would have to pay the difference between the low selling price and the actual cost of production. Either that, or you yourself would help pay the difference in increased taxes supporting a subsidy.

You ALWAYS Have to Pay the Difference

The same is true of electricity. No matter who generates it -- private utility, city-owned light plant or REA -- you must pay for the cost of production. Either through rates or taxes.

Your electric company -- a development of free enterprise through private initiative -- is your best source of low-cost electricity.

Ageless China

In China the first question a person asks another on an official call is, "What is your glorious age?" And enthusiasm grows in proportion as the gentleman is able to report a higher and higher age. If he is anywhere over 50 the inquirer drops his voice in humility and respect.

Busy Beaver

The promise of "lands full of beaver" lured traders and trappers along parts of the Mississippi, St. Lawrence, and the Great Lakes ahead of explorers and missionaries. The beaver laid the foundation for the Hudson's Bay company and for John Jacob Astor's fabulous fortune.

Buckwheat Harvest

A smaller buckwheat harvest in 1949 means fewer winter breakfasts of buckwheat cakes. Although 15 states contribute to the commercial crop of grain, about two-thirds of it is normally harvested close to the New York-Pennsylvania border.

Black Bear

Second most widely distributed big game is the black bear. Once native to all 48 states, it is still found in 34. Although its total in the 1947 census was only 131,000, with Maine and Washington states leading, it has steadily increased through the decade of the Fish and Wildlife service censuses.

Handy and Easy Are Both Wrong

Handy Peterson and Easy Roberts got in quite an argument the other day over at Fred's Garage talking about the best spot to fish up at Green Lake.

"Opposite the old sawmill is the best spot," says Handy. But Easy "pooh-pooh's" him. "I've seen the biggest fish caught off Cedar Point," says Easy. "I've been catching them there for years."

Then Fred goes into his office and brings out the biggest mounted rainbow trout you ever saw. "Bet that was caught at the sawmill," comments Handy. "Cedar Point," says Easy. "Well," says Fred, "you're both wrong. I caught this baby right out in the middle!"

From where I sit, there are always two (or more) sides to every story. Let's live and let live in the true American tradition of toleration. Your opinion is worth a lot, but so is the other fellow's — whether it's on politics, the best fishing spots, or whether he likes a temperate glass of beer and you like buttermilk.

Selecting Shrubs

When you select shrubs for your foundation and border plantings, there are a number of things you should consider. Many people choose a shrub because of attractive flowers and overlook sixe, form, texture and hardiness. Seasonal aspects such as attractive fruits, autumn foliage color and colored winter stems are also important.

• • • •

In making your selection for foundation plantings, consider the mature size of the shrub. Avoid planting large shrubs under windows or between the sidewalk and the house where space is limited. Taller shrubs can be used at the corners of the house and between windows.

• • • •

Alpine currant, dwarf ninebark and Japanese barberry are good low shrubs for under windows. In the drier sections of the state, the Pygmy Caragona is good.

• • • •

Among the taller shrubs useful for foundation plantings are winged Euonymus, Wahoo, Cotoneaster, Vanhouette spirea, Zabelli honeysuckle and Chinese lilac.

• • • •

Coarser materials can be used in the shrub border than in the foundation planting. Use the mock oranges, common lilac, Tatarian honeysuckle and Russian olive toward the back of the border. Place lower shrubs toward the front of the border. It's best to arrange these border shrubs in natural groups rather than as single specimens.

When planting, allow ample room between shrubs for full development. Plant large shrubs at least 6 feet apart, medium shrubs about 4 feet apart and dwarf shrubs 2 or 3 feet apart.

• • • •

Fast-Growing versus Slow Growing Trees

Soon you'll be selecting and planting trees for your yard. To be really valuable, a tree must live up to rigid qualifications. For one thing, it must be in scale with the house and grounds.

• • • •

A lawn tree should have other qualifications: (1) long life; (2) strong branches that don't break readily; (3) deep roots, because shallow-rooted trees compete with the lawn and are not drought-resistant; (4) an attractive from.

• • • •

Not all trees will live up to these requirements. Many home owners want a tree that will grow fast and provide shade in a few years. Unfortunately, few fast-growing trees like poplars, willows, soft maple, box elder and Chinese elm meet many of these qualifications. Most of them are short-lived or else their branches are brittle and break in a storm.

• • • •

For the large home and grounds these trees are good: backberry, American elm, green ash, basswood and sugar maple, where it is adapted. On sandy soil the honey locust makes a fine lawn tree.

• • • •

For the small yard, the flowering crabapples, hawthorne, buckeye and Mayday trees are good. In moist protected sites the white birch and mountain ash are attractive.

State's Woodlot Owners Invited to Join Tree Farms

The campaign to enlist eight million acres of timber in the Minnesota Tree Farm system gets under way this week. Any farmer or other owner of at least five wooded acres in eligible to join. He agrees to protect his forest from grazing and fire and to harvest his trees according to sound timber management methods. Each of those who qualify will receive a Tree Farm sign and the continued services of trained foresters.

The first Tree Farm was established in 1941 in the State of Washington. The object was to make the tract commercially profitable through good management. Since then the movement has spread to 27 states and now includes more than 20 million acres. In Minnesota the Tree Farm plan is sponsored by the state department of conservation, the Keep Minnesota Green committee and the Forest Industries committee.

Leaders of the movement are especially eager to enlist the support of owners of small woodlots, for 30 per cent of the raw wood supply comes from farm timberland. The rapid depletion of mature forests in America in recent generations means a shortage in the future unless trees are encouraged and protected. The Tree Farm System aims at continuous production at a profit to the owner.

Every county in Minnesota is expected to take part. A booklet describing Tree Farms and an application blank may be obtained from Frank W. Forbes, agricultural agent for Marshall county, or from the Division of Forestry, State Office building, St. Paul.

DOG-GONE GOOD NEWS HOUNDS, THESE

Leo Perisian's dog was only a mongrel pet until recently, now he's a thoroughbred hero. At four o'clock one Sunday morning the dog's frantic barking awakened his master, who found a car burning in his Wadena shop and was able to forestall further damage . . . Chester Gould bought a Christmas tree of a north Minneapolis dealer, and let Brownie, the family pooch drag it home; next day Brownie showed up with another Christmas tree which Mr. Gould hadn't bought.

Deer Habits Studied at Mud Lake

Thirty-six deer were trapped, weighed and tagged on the Mud Lake National Wildlife Refuge during the period January 1-Mar. 15. Mud Lake Refuge is a Federal wildlife refuge of 60,000 acres located in Marshall county. A total of 88 deer have been tagged and weighed since trapping operations were commenced in 1947, announced R. W. Hunt, refuge manager.

Live-weight records provided an accurate method of determining how the deer are wintering, and tag returns give accurate information on movement of the refuge deer, growth of individual animals, longevity, etc.

Some of the refuge deer tend to remain pretty much within the vicinity of the refuge area from one year to another, while others leave the refuge and have been shot as far as 60 miles from refuge boundaries.

One buck fawn was tagged on January 6, 1949, weighing in at 85 pounds (live-weight). He was shot during the open season, November 12-16, 1949, near Lake Bronson, and weighed 145 pounds (hog-dressed), while carrying a set of antlers with six points. This is most unusual, but the report has been verified.

The month of January was abnormally cold (accompanied with deep snow), and refuge deer lost some weight, although they were still able to move about enough to obtain browse. Checks on mortality todate indicate no more than a normal winter loss of small fawns, and the great majority of the refuge herd of 800-900 deer wintered very well. A total of 770 acres covered on foot has revealed not a single deer dying in the period January 1-April 1. Extensive areas of willow provide the major source of winter food for both the Mud Lake deer and the 31 moose now using the area.

Store Sales in R. R. V. Show Another Drop

February department and general store sales in Red River Valley Minnesota were 6 percent below February last year according to figures released by the Federal Reserve Bank of Minneapolis. Comparison of the first two months of the year show a decrease of 15 percent from a year ago.

In reverse of the situation last year, county stores in the Ninth Federal Reserve district how a 3 percent loss for the month, while the cities of Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth and Superior register a 13 percent increase. This brings the average for the district to 5 percent above February last year. Sales throughout the district during the two months of 1950 were about equal to those of the same perid last year.

WHAT WILL THE 1950 CENSUS SAY?

St. Paul—Last census gave Minnesota a population of 2,972,300; current estimate is 2,977,000. Next year an accurate count will be available. Whereas at the last census about 44% of the population lived on farms, it is believed the general movement to towns and cities will find this proportion shrunken. North Dakota is believed to have lost more than 5% of its 642,000, Montana to have lost a little, South Dakota to have gained a little.

When buying shade trees, be sure the tree has a good root system and has been freshly dug. Be careful not to expose the roots before or during planting. Keep them covered with wet burlap until planted.

Certain moths cannot fly until they have reached "flight temperature" by energetically vibrating their wings.

Child Care Clue: Let the Kids Grow Up, Please

One of the safest rules to follow in child care and guidance is to let the children grow up, states a bulletin today from the Minnesota State Medical association.

Parents who attempt to keep their offspring at docile, babyish levels are heading for trouble, most pediatricians agree. There is the mother, for instance, who insists that 8-year-old Ellen play in her own backyard, when her playmates are frolicking in the school playground, three blocks away. Then she wonders why Ellen is sullen and rebellious. The father, who thinks his 12-year-old son is old enough to be trusted with an allowance, may find to his surprise and disappointment that the boy will "borrow" some change from his mother's purse, in order to keep the kids he plays with from thinking him a baby or a sissy.

Certainly parents should not permit their children to grow up beyond their years or to receive privileges of various kinds just because "the other kids do." But the wise parent tries to judge what responsibilities and rights the child is ready for at each stage in his development. In cases where parents do not agree that what "the gang" is doing is best for their child, they would do well to explain simply and logically to the child why this or that privilege is denied him.

Parents should also realize that the child is a person is his own right and does not like to be called away from an exciting game of baseball or a good book to run an errand. The child's duties in the home should be outlined in advance, so that he may schedule his own activities with them in mind.

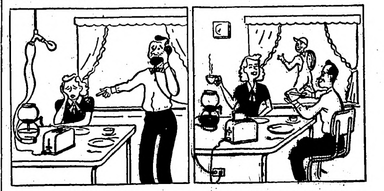
ELECTRICAL TIPS FOR THE HOME

If Your Toaster and Coffee Maker Take Forever to Heat Up . . .



DON'T blame the appliance or your dealer. Chances are your wiring is overloaded. Overloading can cause as much as 10% voltage drop on a circuit. When this happens, a toaster will take 31.5% more time to heat up and a coffee maker will take 22.5% more time than when the wiring is adequate.

DO install at least two 20-ampere appliance circuits to serve cooking appliances in the kitchen and in the dining room. When there are enough circuits of large enough wire, your electrical equipment will operate efficiently and economically. You will also be assured of better cooking results.

Controlled Grain Acreage Turning Unused Land to Raising Cattle

The reversal of the trend that found the cow population decreasing has sharpened the problems the dairy farmer must face today, John Brandt, president, Land O' Lakes Creamers, Inc., said this week.

The cycle of decreasing cow numbers on the farm, he said, has passed, and in the southern as well as the northern part of the nation greater emphasis is being put on dairying.

At the same time as there exists the prospect of a material increase in the production of milk, he pointed out, there is direct legislative encouragement in the manufacture and consumption of substitutes for dairy products.

He said that acreage allotments for cotton and peanuts in the south was shifting production into grasses. That shift, he said, is particularly noticeable in the middle south where pasture grasses that furnish good grazing all year round have been developed.

But the increase of interest in dairying is seen in the north also, he said, where controlled acreage of corn and wheat is encouraging the shift from grain production into production of grasses to be utilized in feeding dairy cattle.

"So long as we have price supports," he said, "many dairy farmers feel that their problem is solved and that all they need to do is go ahead and produce more diary products. Since consumers of dairy products have more votes than producers, the pressure of this group against mounting surpluses of dairy products that must be paid for out of tax money while maintaining parity prices will eventually cause the whole dairy program to blow up."

He said that the most favorable prospects for getting this product consumed is for the dairy farmer to promote better advertising and merchandising of his product. He must carry this load himself, Mr. Brandt said, through the American Dairy association which is holding its annual meeting in Chicago this week, and which is the established medium thru which the farmer can and should make a contribution to be used in the promotion of his products.

"(Then the farmer has his own marketing organization that can supplement the sale of his dairy products under his own brand, the combination of which bids well for the future of dairying if the farmer exercises business judgment in the field of advertising and merchandising," he said.

The other alternative, he said, lies in the field of legislative action which would permit the dairy farmer to set up his own self-help program, in which all dairy farmers would contribute to the operation of a surplus holding pool that would make a home for temporary seasonal surpluses that always depress the market. Total sales of dairy products, he said, will always follow the path of the price that can be received for the surplus.

He said that the Dairy Products Marketing association set the pattern and proved the economy and efficiency of this type of operation, but the program will require enactment of legislation before it can go into operation.

Consider Room In Choosing New Curtains

So you're investing in new curtains this year!

"How will these curtains look at home?" is the first question every homemaker should ask when she is shopping. The most startling design may make the biggest impression. The test, however, lies in the way a striking design or color will look with the other furnishings in the room, says Helen Matheis, extension home furnishings specialist at the University of Minnesota.

Successful shopping requires that homemakers first take inventory of the room. Here are some of the points to consider when selecting curtains:

Size and shape of the room. Large rooms can use striking draperies with large, bold designs. For a small room, simple draw curtains, straight-hanging draperies or sheer floor-length curtains are best.

Size, shape and number of windows. Too wide, too narrow and other problem windows may need special treatment.

Exposure. The direction the windows face will help determine what colors to use. A room with windows facing north, for example, might seem cheerless unless warm colors are used.

Color of walls, wood trim and rugs. Draperies should blend or contrast pleasingly with other colors in the room.

Kind of furniture. Select a fabric which harmonizes with the furniture and upholstery.

The sales clerk can usually offer helpful advice when given accurate information about the room and its furnishings.

Institute To Be Held in Hallock

During the two weeks following Easter, caravans of leaders in Christian education from seven different denominations will conduct 28 Vacation Church School Institutes in strategic centers throughout the state of Minnesota.

The Institute for Vacation Church School workers from this community will be held April 18 from 10 to 4 at Evang Church in Hallock.

Help will be given in planning, administering and teaching the Vacation Church School. There will be a demonstration of the latest materials and visual education aids.

Fifteen leaders will conduct the Institutes, serving in teams of three. The Institutes are sponsored by the Minnesota Council of Churches and County Councils of Churches or Councils of Religious Education serving in cooperation with the Protestant churches of Minnesota.

183,286 Acres of Trees Burned in State during 1949

The annual report of the Minnesota division of Forestry, Conservation Department, reveals that 1,182 forest fires burned a total area of 183,296 acres and caused a value damage of $915,316. The acreage is the largest since 1938 and the damage the greatest since 1931.

The report states that the large fire destruction was a result of drought conditions in 1948 aggravated by a continued shortage of moisture in the early spring of 1949. During the months of April and May, 956 fires burned. This is 80 per cent of the total number and nearly 98 per cent of the total area for the year.

Cost of prevention and suppression for the year to the state was $654,358 and to federal fund allotted to the state $235,076 or a total of $889,434. This cost plus the damage to natural resources amounting to $915,369 makes a grand total of $1,804,803 as the cost and loss of 1949 forest fires.

Causes of the fires were meadow burning 367; land clearing 179; smokers 198; railroads 171; incendiary 84; campfires 29; lightning 11 and miscellaneous 136.

The damages are listed as timber $664,924; watershed and soil $44,879; game and recreation $130,668 and miscellaneous $74,898.

Over half of the fires were less than 10 acres in size, but there were 25 over 1,000 acres each and the largest was 29,400 acres.

Normal or above moisture during the summer and fall checked the fire hazards in most forest areas, but the year ended with an annual deficiency of rain and snow amounting to nearly four inches.

Barley Contest Staged to Promote Better Quality

Contestants in the 4th Annual Barley Growing Contest are sending in their entries in the $5,800 contest sponsored by the Minnesota Brewers association.

This contest, which offers prizes of $5,800 in cash to the growers of prize malting barley in 23 Minnesota counties, is appealing especially to the growers in Marshall county.

The purpose of the contest is to encourage production and marketing quality barley which can be used for malting and to acquaint the farmers with the greater profit possibilities in malting barley. It also emphasizes the importance of using proved varieties of malting barley. Contestants are limited to five varieties: Barbless Wis. 38, Kindred (L), OAC 21 (Artic), Montcalm and Moore.

The contest was started 4 years ago, and while it is sponsored by the Minnesota Brewers association, it is conducted with the cooperation of the University of Minnesota Department of Agriculture, the Minnesota and Northwest Crop Improvement associations and the Minnesota Department of Agriculture, Dairy & Food.

The only requisite to enter the contest is that the grower plant 10 acres of barley of the approved malting variety. For detailed information, contestants are urged to contact the local county agent, who will supply them with entry forms and information.

ASK UNIVERSITY FARM

STAFF MEMBERS WILL GLADLY ANSWER QUESTIONS ON FARM OR HOME PROBLEMS. ADDRESS UNIVERSITY FARM • ST. PAUL 1
HERE ARE QUESTIONS ANSWERED RECENTLY

Q. Is it necessary to buy a pad when getting a new rug?

A. It is not necessary, but it is advisable. A rug pad doubles or quadruples the life of a rug. It also adds to the luxurious feel and appearance of the rug, especially if the nap is not very long. —Mary May Miller, extension home management specialist.

• • • •

Q. Do you recommend crested wheat, meadow fescue, or other such grasses for Minnesota?

A. Not at present. Additional studies have yet to be made. Crested wheat does look promising, however, especially in the Red River Valley.—Ralph Crim, extension agronomist.

• • • •

Q. Will house plants do well in glazed earthenware pots?

A. Flower pots may be glazed or unglazed earthenware, metal or wood, provided they have proper facilities for drainage at the bottom. A drainage hole is always advisable. Plants grown in glazed pots will not require water as often as plants in unglazed pots. —R. E. Widmer, horticulturist.

• • • •

Q. Do you recommend growing grass in a mixture with legumes?

A. Yes. Tests show nearly twice the hay or pasture yield from a good legume-grass mixture, compared with grass alone. From the pasture standpoint, the mixture is better because of (1) slightly better forage yields; (2) alfalfa alone won't stand pasturing; (3) the sod protects against wind and water erosion better; and (4) grass roots produce a stable type of humus, which is slow to decompose and often desirable to have.—H. L. Thomas, agronomist.

• • • •

Q. What kind of gauge should you look for in a pressure saucepan?

A. The most durable gauges work on the "dead-weight" principle. The dead weight gauge is simply a piece of metal of suitable weight and design which rests on the steam vent. When the pressure rises to the desired level, it lifts the weight and permits enough steam to escape so the pressure inside the cooker is held steady. These pressure indicators are not damaged by water or by dropping or jarring. Any indicator with a spring in it or one with a moving pointer will become less accurate with use. — Mrs. Mary Tarulli, home economist.

• • • •

Q. What is the best use of farm land when row crop acreage is cut down?

A. Seed more acres to grass and legumes. Include a year or two of legumes as a regular part of the crop rotation. Seed rolling and erosive areas and waterways to legume-grass mixtures. Determine the needed lime and fertilizer requirements to hold a stand, once you get it started.—Paul Burson, Soil Testing Lab head.

• • • •

Q. Is it necessary to sift flour before measuring?

A. Since flour tends to pack during shipping and handling, it is advisable to sift it once before measuring. Sifting helps give an accurate measure. After sifting, measure in a standard cup, filling it lightly and leveling off with the straight edge of a knife. When a very small amount is to be used for thickening or gravy, it is sufficient to stir the flour in the container.—Ina Rowe, extension nutritionist.

• • • •

Q. My well won't meet daily needs. What is the best solution?

A. You can (1) improve the old well, (2) put down a new well, or (3) install a pump with capacity equal to the old well and provide extra water storage to supply the farm during those periods when it is used faster than it is pumped. —George McPhee, extension engineer.

Outdoor accidents claimed 21 more lives in Minnesota in 1949 than in 1948, according to Carl Moen of the State Conservation department.

A total of 183 persons died in 1949 as compared to 162 in 1948, Moen said. Total outdoor mishaps were up to 325 in 1949 over 240 in 1948, he added.

As the first step in an intensive spring and summer drive to reduce the mounting death and accident toll in hunting, fishing and boating activities, the State Department of Conservation, the Minnesota Safety Council and the Variety Club of the Northwest are sponsoring a safety slogan contest, Moen said.

A total of $12,000 in prizes will be awarded for the 10 best safety slogans. First prize for the best slogan submitted will be a 26-foot Chris-Craft cruiser valued at $7,800, and second prize will be $2,000 in cash.

All proceeds of the contest will be turned over to the building fund of the Variety Heart Hospital now under construction on the University of Minnesota campus.

The contest is open to all residents of the Uppen Midwest. Slogans must be five words or less in length and must be mailed with a donation of $1 or more not later than midnight, April 12, to Safety Slogan Contest, Box 1007, Minneapolis Post Office.

Providing recreation and entertainment for hospitalized and convalescent servicemen is an important Red Cross job at military hospitals. These Red Cross hospital recreation workers take a group of patients for a tour of Mammoth Cave, Ky., during an outing sponsored by a community service organization.

Any woman will tell you she'd rather nurse five sick children than one sick man. Doctors and nurses are inclined to agree with her. A man resents being helpless and is often beset by fears for himself and his family.

Unlike the patient in the civilian hospital, who undergoes his convalescence at home, the soldier remains in the hospital until he is completely fit for duty. After the acute phase of the serviceman's illness is past, he is sent to a "reconditioning ward," where he remains until he is able to take up his regular military job. Sometimes he remains there for weeks. An usually he is far from home.

For recreation and simple, pleasurable activities to fill those long hours of convalescence, military physicians in post hospitals look to the American Red Cross and its corps of specially trained recreation workers.

Recreational programs are adapted to the needs of both the man confined to his ward and the convalescent. They range from teaching a bedridden man to play solitaire to dances and bingo games for the man on the road to recovery.

There are motion pictures for both ward patients and the convalescent, and for the ambulatory patients there are tickets and transportation to nearby ball parks and theaters.

There are also the special services provided by volunteer workers. Gray Ladies run errands and write letters, Motor Service provides transportation. Volunteer Services, working with other community agencies, help bring into the hospitals boys and girls of the same age group as the hospitalized serviceman.

Red Cross provides the "home touch" which, added to medical and nursing care, helps restore the sick man to good health.

REPORT TO THE PEOPLE

By Governor
Luther W. Youngdahl

Judge Paul W. Alexander of Toledo used an interesting illustration in discussing divorces on his recent visit to Minnesota. Said he:

"A Nevada legislator recently introduced a bill to provide for divorce by slot machines. Divorce seekers reaching Nevada would register for a $5 fee. This fee would buy a special key to a combination juke box, time clock and slot machine. They would be required to use their keys on the machines for 42 consecutive days. This would automatically record the fact that they had spent the statutory six weeks in the state necessary for divorce.

"On the 42nd day, the divorce seeker would insert in his machine 200 specially coined dollars, mineed from Nevada silver. Lights would flash. Wheels would spin. The juke box would play, and a divorce decree would pop out of a slot, complete with colored ribbons, an imprint of the seal of Nevada and the signature of the district judge."

One Divorce For Four Marriages

Sounds fantastic, doesn't it? And yet divorces often are granted almost as speedily and almost as automatically. More than 415,000 families a year are broken up by divorces, according to the latest reports, and most of them, maybe as much as 80%, are uncontested. In Minnesota, 4,657 families were shattered by divorce in 1948, latest year for which figures now are available, and from 10,000 to 12,000 children, through no fault of their own, bereft of one or both parents.

Back in 1890, there was one one divorce for every 11 marrithis country. By 1910, there was one divorce for every 11 marriages. By 1940, the ratio had reached one divorce to every 6 marriages, and the latest figures, those for 1948, show there now is one divorce for every four marriages.

Children Greatest Losers

I am deeply concerned, as I am sure you and many others are, over the breakdown in family life which these figures seem to indicate. A satisfying family life is a basic, human need, and nations decay when home and family deteriorate. Wise men always have measured strength of a nation in the strength of its homes. Lord Macaulay said long ago that this nation will be laid waste if it is, not from without but by forces from within.

Children especially have a concern in divorces. When a home breaks up, the children often lose the chance for a normal, home life. Of the children committed to the Minnesota Youth Commission, 67% of the girls and 59% of the boys came from broken homes where one or both parents were missing.

A New Approach

I am glad to say that a new approach to marital problems is being developed. Instead of relying on the usual divorce court, which generally gets the case after the difficulty has become insoluble, there is being established in a few far-seeing communities a family or domestic relations court, which seeks to smooth out the difficulties before they become mountainous and so restore the families to normal, happy family groups. I am glad not long ago to have opportunity to appoint an Interim Legislative Committee on Domestic Relations here in Minnesota, headed by Judge Paul S. Carroll and including other able judges, lawyers, educators, welfare leaders and citizens with special qualifications, to consider steps which we may take "to preserve the family as a going institution." The committee is studying laws in other states affecting divorce and family courts and will, I think, have some very worthwhile recommendotions for the next Legislature. Experience has shown that properly staffed family courts, to which husbands and wives can come for sympathetic and understanding counsel at the outset of trouble, before there is serious thought of divorce, frequently can smooth away the difficulties and keep the families together. I am sure such a plan would be helpful here. The District Judges Association and many other groups have supported it and I believe it would have general approval.

Minnesota Bond Drive Quota Set

Following the announcement by Secretary Snyder that the national sales goal of the Savings Bonds Independence Drive will be $650,000,000, State Chairman Von E. Luscher of the Minnesota Savings Bonds Committee disclosed today that Minnesota's share of the E Bond sales objective is $15,148,000.

The campaign, which will open May 15 and run through July 4, will feature the Liberty Bell as its symbol and "Save For Your Independence—Buy U. S. Savings Bonds" as its slogan. County quotas will be announced later.

SIGN BEFORE OR AFTER EATING?

Rochester—It all depends on the point of view whether this is a new wrinkle in table cloths or in guest books. Anyway you look at it, it's unique. Mrs. Dwight Havens, wife of the Chamber of Commerce executive, not only permits tablecloth doodling, but encourages it; she has guests sign a big cloth then embroideries the signatures. The printed names of her two young sons and of a Nebraska governor are among the 160 signatures thus far embroidered on this unique record.

Co. Cancer Drive Has $1,100 Quota; Chairmen Named

Marshall county has accepted $1,100 as its goal in the 1950 Cancer Crusade of the American Cancer society, Victor H. Aalbu, county campaign chairman, announced today.

Mr. Aalbu has announced the drive chairman for the towns of the county. They include: Mrs. Ralph Dahlstrom, Alvarado; Mrs. Emil Carlson, Argyle; Mrs. George Fricker, Holt; Mrs. Anno Huset, Middle River; Mrs. A. M. Lokken, Newfolden; Mrs. Leo Halfman, Stephen; Mrs. Willis Stennes, Strandquist; Mrs. Jens Golden Warren. Chairman for Grygla, Oslo and Viking have not been named yet.

To cope with the ever-increasing need for funds for use in its broad program of research, education and service, the American Cancer society, has set its nationwide fund raising goal at $14,500,000 this year.

"The people of our community can be expected to give generously to support the assault against the dread disease which continues to threaten the health and life of everyone," Mr. Aalbu said. "With the knowledge that we can fight cancer by contributing our share toward the state goal of $260,000, each of us will give to the best of his ability, increasing pledges over last year where possible.

"The major portion of the funds raised in our state will remain here for use in financing research projects, such as those now underway at our own University, and for educational and service facilities. Through our county chapter, the Minnesota Division of the American Cancer society distributes enormous amounts of literature in order to make everyone aware of the need for detecting cancer early, how it can be detected and the fact that it is curable if caught in time.

"The greatest share of the moneys forwarded to the Cancer Society's national office return to our state in the form of grants-in-aid to the research projects at the University. The Society also awards research fellowships for work in cancer."

Creameries, cooperating with local banks, will handle the project, which has been endorsed by the Minnesota Bankers association and farm organizations.

Responsibility for acquainting dairymen in each county with the plan lies with the "key banker", appointed by the MBA. He will contact bankers of his county, who, in turn, will make arrangements with creamery operators to make available the plan to any dairyman who desires to participate in automatic savings.

1. A dairy farmer authorizes his creamery to save a specified amount (not necessarily the cost of any particular denomination of Savings Bond) from his regular creamery check.
2. The creamery will accumulate the savings until the purchase price of a bond has been reached and will order the bond for the dairyman from a cooperating bank.
3. The bank will issue the bond and mail it directly to the dairyman.

Support for the plan is being given by the following organizations, in addition to the MBA: Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc.; Twin City Milk Producers association; Minnesota Farm Bureau federation; Minnesota Dairy Industry committee; extension division, University Farm; Farmers Union Grain Terminal association; Minnesota Creameries association; Minnesota Creamery Operators and Managers association; Minnesota U.S.D.A. council; dairy and food division, state department of agriculture; and State Grange of Minnesota.

The educational campaign will continue through April 1, Bandy said.

HOW'S YOUR HEALTH?

Father Should Play Broader Family Role

The place of father in the home should no longer be just provider and punisher. He should play a broader role in the lives of his wife and his children, states a bulletin from the Minnesota State Medical association.

Here are some of the things a father should be if he is to add to the lives of his family:

1. Admirer and Rooter for Mother. This means that even when father and mother do not agree they should present a united front to the children and discuss the matter later. Father should point out to the children how much the mother does for the family. When the parents argue, the children suffer.

2. A Fair Decider. This means that when there is some disagreement, the father should be the one to talk the problem over and decide which is the best and fairest way to settle it.

3. A Playmate. This means just what it says—the father should become a pal of the youngsters, their real friend. In doing this he should not decide what game will be played; he must not always win; and he must forget his dignity, come down to the child's level—even sitting on the floor will show them he is one of them.

4. A Funmaker. This means that the father should be ready with a joke or something which will help ease any tense situation. He should also plan surprise entertainments for the family when the mother is too tired to plan anything.

5. A Teacher. This means that the father should help the mother teach some of the things that schools and Sunday schools leave out. He can teach children the meaning of right and wrong, good sportsmanship, and how to get along with people.

6. An Ideal. This means that the father should set a good example. If he is a hero in the children's eyes, he is close to being a very successful father.

ME?

Yes, you, Mrs. Customer. You're a very powerful person. You're particular and you're canny when it comes to spending money. And you spend 85¢ of every dollar spent in stores and shops in this country.

Maybe you never thought of yourself as a captain of industry, but you are—and here's why.

You decide for yourself what you'll buy and what you won't. If you don't like a product, you won't buy it. If you do—you buy it again and again. Annually you pass judgment on thousands of products—literally make or break manufacturers.

That's because you keep track of all the products offered you by their brand names. Brand names that distinguish each product from all others.

Naturally, when a manufacturer puts his brand name on a product, he wants you, Mrs. Customer, to like it. That's why brand names give you protection when you buy. That's why brand names are a dependable guide to buying high-quality, uniform products.

Brand names make shopping easier, too. They provide the most convenient, economical way to choose exactly what you want. Remember when you go shopping, always look for the brand names.

Poor Risks

Chicks suffering from parasitic diseases and nutritional disorders are poor risks for vaccination. For this reason, the condition of the flock should be investigated before vaccination is attempted. The advice applies to all four poultry diseases against which vaccines have been developed: fowl pox, laryngotracheitis, Newcastle disease, and infectious bronchitis.

Turtle Eggs

Turtle eggs, no tempting morsel for appetites in the United States, are consumed in South America by natives and Europeans alike. Eggs of the lizard species, the iguana, are considered a great delicacy by gourmets.

High School Senior Play May 5

The senior class of Newfolden High School has selected for their play, "The Campbells Are Coming," written by Jay Tobias directed by Mrs. R. Tunheim, and will be presented Friday evening May 5th.

It is a farce-comedy in three acts with all hillbilly trimmings. A false backgroung is used as the effective technique for getting rid of an undesirable suitor.

The cast that has been selected includes The foxy Grandpa Brannigan, Shirley MacDonald, who engineers the hoax; her grandson, Dick, Robert Johnson, who impersonates the family idiot; her granddaughter, Betty, Gladys Ness, who is wild and shy as a rabbit; her old flame, Cyrus Scudder, Lester Lindquist who poses as Betty's suitor; and two hillbillies, Catalpa, Esther Benson, the worthless servant girl, and her worthless scamp of a father, Bildad Tapp, Joel Vattendahl. Ardelle Bring is Kay Jeffery Scudder, George Fricker is a dependable fellow that Kaye threw over for Kingston Campbell, Erling Huglen, an aristocratic young man who visits Kaye's home with his very snobbish mother Mrs. Augusta Campbell, Patsy Dyrud.

If you want an evening of fun be sure to see this play, May 5, at 8 p. m. in Newfolden.

Fricker Came Here 25 Yrs. Ago

Twenty-five years of service to Holt and community is the record of one of our esteemed citizens, George Fricker, who came to Holt 25 years ago April 20th, to to be employed in the Marshall County State Bank. Not only has he been a faithful and honest custodian of finances here, but has also been a friend and councelor to all who sought his advise. His immense prestige in the community has undeniably been supported by his loyalty as a member of the local Board of Education, Village Council and all other organizations that make a community such as ours, progress. Do we appreciate the fact that we have a bank here in our midst? With so many small banks going out of existence some years ago, we should take stock and give thought to the fact that we have a bank here, and one that can do justice to our financial problems just as well as any bank in larger community. The sound judgement and banking experience of George Fricker should leave no doubt in our minds as to where we should do our banking. We should also be very humble about it, as there is no doubt that he has had offers to go elsewhere, but has seen fit to remain here. How about giving him a handshake next time you go into the bank and wish him continued success in the next 25 years.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Need Claimed to Keep GI's Abroad If Continent to be Fully Guarded; Berlin Stocks Up for Emergencies

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

EUROPE:
Just in Case

The demands of the cold war are becoming steadily more vast and insistent. First and continuing is money—American dollars to stem the tide of communism and protect itself—so the theory goes—by protecting Europe.

NOW IT IS MEN Europe wants. American GI's to garrison the continent. A permanent garrison of American troops in western Europe—even after German occupation ends—is vital to the Atlantic pact defense, several European experts believe.

THE EXPERTS quoted argue that American troops would provide on-the-spot leadership for Europe's defense forces, and would serve as a reassurance to France if German troops eventually are too powerful in the western European defense.

At present, as the pact alliance rounds out its first year, its 12 member powers have about 22 divisions of varying strength and effectiveness among them.

The normal compliment of a division is 15,000 men. That means a total of 330,000 potential fighting men ready to meet any attack upon the pact signatories. It also means that each pact signatory is putting less than two divisions into the overall plan to protect themselves.

Under such a setup it is conceivable that America might have to bolster the defensive line; but the setup poses anew the question: How sincere is Europe in efforts to rehabilitate and protect itself?

BERLIN:
Fear Crisis

In the event of a crisis such as that precipitated by the Russian blockade in 1948, Berlin was ready. The west has stocked the city's bins with enough food and coal to make a mockery of any new blockade.

In the 11 months since the Reds lifted the blockade of the city, a steady stream of train, truck and barge traffic has piled up what is felt to be adequate supplies to meet any emergency.

When Russia clamped down the blockade, in an effort to impose its own political convictions on Berlin, the city had only an average of six weeks supplies on hand. Now the basic staples are in about six months supply and in all probability will continue to increase as further stocks are added.

It was felt that the Russians, aware of this process, would be less foolhardy than to attempt another blockade effort, but even so, no one was taking any chances because of the unpredictability of Soviet action and of the old truism that "what has happened once, can happen again."

HIGH COURT:
Accused Must Talk

A ruling of the U.S. supreme court is likely to serve as a powerful stimulant for those accused of Communist sympathies and refuse to talk.

The court refused to grant a hearing to two Hollywood writers convicted of contempt of congress. The action let stand a decision that congressional committees may compel witnesses to say whether they are Communists. The vote was 6 to 2.

By its action, the high court refused to interfere with a lower court decision holding that congress may abridge either the freedom of speech or the freedom to remain silent "when legislating to avert what it believes to be a threat of substantive evil to national welfare."

The high court handed down the opinion but did not explain its reason. It took the action in a brief order saying it would not hear the appeals of screen writers John Howard Lawson and Dalton Trumbo. They had been pending since last August 11. Lawson and Trumbo are each under sentence to serve a year in jail and to pay a fine of $1,000. They had been free under bond.

The court's order noted that Justices Black and Douglas favored a review of the case, and that Justice Clark took no part.

Lawson and Trumbo were two of 10 prominent screen figures who refused to tell a congressional committee whether they had been members of the Communist party.

Chills Charges

Brig. Gen. Conrad E. Snow, head of the U.S. state department's loyalty board, testifies before the senate subcommittee investigating charges of communism in the state department. He chilled charges by Sen. Joseph McCarthy (R., Wis.) when he told probers that he knows of no Communists in the department.

VACATIONS:
Why Not England?

For the American tourist planning a trip abroad, England can't be beat, according to Farnham F. Dudgeon, editor-in-chief of Western Newspaper Union, a newspaper syndicate.

DUDGEON visited England some weeks ago along with 14 other representatives of newspaper syndicates, press associations and periodicals. The host on the flight over the Atlantic and the trip through England and Scotland was the British Travel association which is engaged in a campaign to attract tourist trade to the British Isles.

The syndicate chief reported that "England definitely is the place to go" for the American who wants a memorable trip abroad at a modicum of cost. This is true, he said, because of the many places and things in England that are so closely tied in with our own history.

"Right now, England is a tourist paradise," Dudgeon said. "Especially is this true because the pound devaluation has added so much more purchasibility to the American tourist dollar. For example, one may stay at almost any of the picturesque inns or hotels for as little as $21 to $23 a week.

"TRANSPORTATION facilities in both England and Scotland are excellent, even if the equipment is somewhat battered from the war. The British are eager to make Americans feel at home, and one gets the impression that this is a sincere hospitality, not motivated exclusively by the desire for American dollars."

There is little need to remind Americans of the particular charm and beauty of the British and Scottish countrysides, with their lakes, moors, heather, famed resort spots and historic buildings and landmarks, because they are known, even if vicariously, to most Americans.

"But seeing them at first hand is an altogether thrilling and memorable experience," Dudgeon said.

RADAR:
Day & Night

The country was informed during the week that there is at least some insurance against another "Pearl Harbor" in the event an enemy should attack. That insurance is a radar and civilian-airplane-spotting network that is now far enough along to provide protection.

The announcement also reported that alarm systems have been installed that can flash an alert to air force interceptor squadrons and civilian warning centers within a matter of seconds. All these moves simply are preparedness, officials stressed, and do not indicate any need of these defenses is imminent.

Air force officials said more than 200 warning centers now are hooked up and many more will soon be in operation. The centers are selected by officials such as governors, mayors and chiefs of police. Headquarters will be in key cities and someone will always be available to man the warning apparatus.

CLAIM & COUNTER-CLAIM

Could Anti-Red Bill Win Congress' Okay?

Could a bill to control Communist activities in the United States win approval of congress? There was some squabbling about the question with claim and counter-claim being hurled.

Senator Ferguson (R., Mich.) claimed he could line up top-heavy support for such a measure, but said he expected the administration's leaders would try to block action on it. That forecast of Democratic intentions burned majority leader Scott Lucas, of Illinois. He promptly retorted that Ferguson was "just talking politics."

But Ferguson told reporters he was convinced the administration is opposing passage of the bill and that the difficulty was in getting senate leaders to bring it up for action.

These Were the Great Portsiders

By GRANTLAND RICE

EVEN HOMER nodded. So did Shakespeare, Kipling, Keats and a few others. They were entitled to nod. Most of us are not. We haven't earned any such breaks. So I apologize to the veteran fan from New Jersey who says that in picking Young, Johnson, Alexander and Mathewson as baseball's four greatest pitchers, I mentioned no left-handers.

Grantland Rice

"Were there no great left-handers?" he asks. "Were there no left-handers to match the great right-handers? There must have been. Who were they?"

In order to appease the gentleman from New Jersey and all left-handed athletes and friends, we'll wade into the game's greatest left-handers today and see how they match the game's four greatest right-handers.

We are not going as far back as toad Ramsay and southpaws of a forgotten era. This century is late enough.

Now there happens to be a pretty fair list of left-handers in this limited group. There are fine left-handers not included. But we believe this list covers most of the good ones and the great ones.

You may notice such names as Ruth, Marquard and Gomez. Ruth has the finest left-handed pitching record. He could easily have been the greatest left-handed pitcher of all time. Marquard set or tied an all-time winning record. Lefty Gomez was the most devastating left-hander of his day. He was one of the greatest world series pitchers.

All of this goes to show you what a magnificent list we have all set from which to pick the four best men who might match the four great right-handers we picked some time ago.

* * *

The Four Top Southpaws

Here are the four top left-handers we have selected along with an alternate who is hard to leave out. We have seen them all under every form of competition. We admit in advance that we can be wrong. But wrong or right, here they go—

No. 1 Carl Hubbell, New York Giants.

No. 2 Herb Pennock, Athletics, Red Sox, Yankees.

No. 3 Robert Moses (Lefty) Grove, Athletics.

No. 4 George Edward (Rube) Waddell, Athletics.

No. 5 Eddie Plank, Athletics.

We have never yet been able to figure why Connie Mack had the type of mind to go for left-handed hurlers. Yet it was Connie Mack who produced the best of them and the most of them.

Connie Mack, or Mr. McGillicuddy, should have an evenly balanced mind. Among his right-handers he had Chief Bender and Jack Coombs. But among his left-handers he had Eddie Plank, Rube Waddell, Lefty Grove, Herb Pennock, most of the great ones. Mr. Mack must have been a left-hand dreamer. His phantasies must have roamed in the mystic heavens of the southpaws.

Connie will tell you that Chief Bender was his most dependable hurler. But he will also tell you Rube Waddell was his most brilliant all-around pitcher and that Lefty Grove was the all-time sharpshooter. (Look at Grove's record.) He will inform you that Eddie Plank was the old reliable—he won 283 games for the Athletics.

The Improved Tigers

It is quite possible that Red Rolfe's Detroit Tigers are not going to win the 1950 American league pennant. But it is no part of a certainty that they won't. At least the ex-Dartmouth entry won't be very far away.

The Tigers rate with the Indians and the Indians are not too far below the Red Sox and Yankees. The fact is the American League has five improved teams that look to be stronger than last year.

WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR
by HOMER CROY

A prodigal son of northwest Missouri, Homer Croy drove along a country road amid the scenes of his youth. As he sees familiar places, he remembers happy times with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he'd ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their children, Ida, Lucy and Harlan. He remembers when Ida left home for Gallatin, 70 miles away, to "doctor" for a pain in her side and how Newt exposed the doctor for what he was; police records showed he'd been sued twice by women for broken promises of marriage. Then he remembered when the farm home of the Delinskys, the newly arrived "foreigners," burned down. The Delinskys found refuge with the Kennedys.

CHAPTER XV

"A fire is plenty."

"The neighbors will bring you things—bedclothes, kitchen things, a lookin' glass for you to see your damned beard in."

Delinsky put his hand to his beard.

"We always do that when anybody burns out. Then we'll all pitch in and help haul lumber. You get a head carpenter and we'll all turn in and help. You'll have a new home better than that old one."

Delinsky looked around at the Delinskys who seemed to fill the room. "Where stay?"

Newt moved uneasily at this. "That'll take a bit of figgerin', Anton. Some can stay here; we'll farm the rest out to the neighbors."

Delinsky began to talk again to his wife; they looked from child to child, already portioning them.

"Maybe," he said if not quite sure.

They began to get ready for bed, for all would have to sleep here tonight. Delinskys everywhere—that's the way it seemed.

The shower was held and the neighbors did help build the house, just as Newt knew they would, and the Delinsky were saved to the land. Newt was tremendously pleased. "Think of anybody wantin' to go to the city and run a store."

From time to time Anton Delinsky had said he wanted to become an American citizen and had asked us how to go about it. Newt, taking the lead as he did in nearly everything in our neighborhood, found there were matters of "first papers" and "second papers." The "first papers" were signed, sent "off," and five years passed.

Then came exciting news. The applicant was to appear before the court, and if he passed the "necessary requirements," was to be issued a certification of citizenship. Big words, very perplexing to Anton. But good words, for the meaning was clear. Why, they were wonderful words! An American citizen. His wife would be one and all the children. Goot.

But also the words were a little terrifying. Anton had been in America long enough to be wary of that mysterious and powerful thing called "court." Something always happened to people brought before it. They had been fined, sent to jail, or stock had been replevined.

Never in our lives had we ever seen anybody made into an American citizen.

Now we could see a person naturalized. Somehow the very word was impressive. Newt had become immensely proud of how he was going to make a fine, upstanding voter of a man who had come to our neighborhood in a two-wheeled wagon.

The official who handled such matters was the circuit judge, for this was before naturalization had become a Federal affair.

The naturalization of Anton Delinsky became a neighborhood affair; everybody talked about it. But always was the thought, "What if he fails?" Some said he could try again; others said he couldn't. Anton felt the importance of it, for, in a way, he was not only representing himself but also he was representing us.

The big day arrived and down the road went our buggies and spring wagons; and there among us were Anton and his many children, all dressed up and tremendously excited . . . and a little fearful. We pulled in to the hitch racks and stood around talking. Grandpa had on his faded Union suit and little blue army cap.

Time to Go To the Courthouse

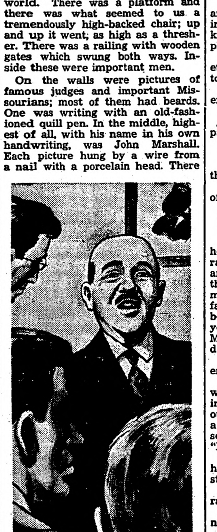
Harlan and I and Arch and Earl and Emmet stood about, self-conscious, too. When we got together on Sunday at one of our homes, we talked about girls. But now, in town with the superior city people around us, we didn't talk girls; we hardly talked at all. We said: "There's so-and so; he told me he was coming," and that was about all.

Anton, in his American suit, was the center of attention. He tried to appear calm and collected, but it was no use. He kept saying, "I fail, I fail."

Time to go, but we still lingered, putting off the moment as long as we could; then we did start for the courthouse. When we had first arrived in town we had been laughing; but not now.

Most farmers wore metal clips, even on their Sunday shoes; we bought the clips and nailed them on, ourselves. And now, as we went down the tiled hall, our steps said clunk-clunk. We came to the stairway. It had a fancy iron rail; it looked extremely grand and impressive. We started up, no heel noise now, and came to the great doors of the courtroom; we entered into what seemed a tremendously solemn and impressive atmosphere. The seats were wooden benches, each row a little higher than the one in front. We sat down on the creaking, gray-painted, whittled benches, not talking at all now, but looking at this new and strange world. There was a platform and there was what seemed to us a tremendously high-backed chair; up and up it went; as high as a thresher. There was a railing with wooden gates which swung both ways. Inside these were important men.

On the walls were pictures of famous judges and important Missourians; most of them had beards. One was writing with an old-fashioned quill pen. In the middle, highest of all, with his name in his own handwriting, was John Marshall. Each picture hung by a wire from a nail with a porcelain head. There were pictures of Senator Thomas Hart Benton, Colonel Alexander W. Doniphan, Senator George Graham Vest and Senator David A. Atchison who we believed had been president of the United States for one day. The most recent was Joseph W. Folk (no beard here).



Suddenly a little man with a bald head began to bellow, "Hear ye, hear ye, hear ye! The honorable circuit court of Nodaway county, Missouri, is now in session."

Delinsky Takes The Witness Stand

Beside the judge's high-backed chair was the finest, the most impressive flag we had ever seen. Silk. Not only that but it was on a pike and on the end of the staff was a bronze eagle. And there were loops and golden cords and glittering tassels. Anton swallowed. His flag.

A great pile of important papers, ledgers and journals was brought out and placed on the tables. We glanced at Anton who was beginning to look more and more nervous. Certainly this was the biggest, the most impressive business he had ever got mixed up in. For that matter, it was with us, too.

Suddenly there was a tremendous stirring; men rushed here and there; we stared, not knowing what was happening, but, whatever it was, we knew it was fine and right. A door was flung open and in came the judge. The people got up; Newt gave Anton a nudge and Anton leaped to his feet because he wanted to do everything exactly right. The judge sat down in the high-backed chair. Suddenly a little man with a bald head began to bellow, "Hear ye, hear ye, hear ye! The honorable circuit court of Nodaway County, Missouri, is now in session." Everybody sat down; the benches creaked. There was a whispering between the judge and the clerk and a great deal of opening books and reading papers.

Newt got up proudly. "Yes, Yer Honor. I've got him right here."

"Come to the witness stand," said the same voice and Anton went slowly and Newt with him.

The judge glanced at Anton's papers on his desk, then began to study them suspiciously. Anton swallowed.

"Is there anything wrong, Yer Honor?" asked Newt.

The judge glared; at least to us he seemed to glare. "Order in court. Do not address the bench unless first spoken to," he thundered.

"Excuse me, Yer Honor," said Newt humbly.

Newt nudged Anton who moved cautiously in.

There were more questions and conferences between the judge and his clerk and examinations of papers; once the judge said, "Hmm!" That looked bad. Finally he said, "Have the candidate for citizenship sworn in."

Anton stood still. Too many big words. Too many fast-moving events.

"He means you, Anton," said Newt.

Bang! went the gavel. "Excuse me, Judge," said Newt.

Suddenly the clerk began to jabber so fast we could hardly follow him, let alone poor Anton, ending with, "Kiss the Bible." Anton stared straight ahead, knowing something was expected of him, but he didn't know what.

Lizzie said something in Russian and a look of understanding came into Anton's face. Whereupon he kissed the Bible with a mighty plop.

Anton's hands went into his pockets, then came out again; nowhere to put them.

The judge fixed upon him a frightening gaze. "What is your name?"

Anton told him.

The clerk wrote something on a paper.

"Where do you live?"

"Is that in Nodaway County, state of Missouri?"

"Yah. Behind poor farm."

The clerk scratched again.

"Ready for the first witness."

The judge asked Newt how long he had known applicant for naturalization, as the judge called him, and Newt told him, getting in all the good words he could. Anton, he managed to say, was as steady a farmer as there was in the neighborhood. "He's as good a man as you'd want to find, Judge." Then Mrs. Kennedy was questioned and did all she could, too.

"Have you anything showing your entry into this country?"

This was puzzling, too; finally it was explained. Anton's hand flew into an inner pocket and brought out a strange, foreign-looking wallet and he began to unwind what seemed a tremendous long string. "Dot's him."

The judge looked exceedingly hard at this, and again our hearts stood still. Anton mopped his brow.

"Did you file a petition for naturalization?"

Anton glanced at Newt. Newt nodded.

"Yah."

"Can you speak the English language?"

"Yah."

"Can you read the English language?"

"Yah."

"That remains to be seen." That sounded ominous. "The applicant will demonstrate this to the court's satisfaction. Is there any reading matter in the court?"

The judge turned a page or two, then pointed to a paragraph. "Read that, Anton Delinsky."

Anton gripped the paper in his red fists and there began a series of brow-wrinklings and throat-clearings. Soon we saw it had to do with mastitis and had words hard for anybody to understand. "When a cow shows in-di-ca-tions . . ." a long pause; we hardly seemed to breathe at all; then he got a fresh grip on the paper . . . "of that scourge of the barnyard . . . mas-ti-tis . . . immediate steps should be taken, or . . ." another long, heartbreaking pause . . . "or fa-tal-i-ty will be the—the pen-al-ty."

We all looked at the judge, hoping he would not make Anton read more. Thank God! he didn't. "This court is convinced the applicant can read the English language." A sigh of relief went up from us, for we were suffering almost as much as Anton. So far, so good.

Anton Is Very Proud of Himself

The judge consulted his papers again, then announced it was necessary for the applicant to be "further examined." The words smote our ears. Would—Oh would—the dreadful ordeal never be over?

"Were you ever arrested, or charged with any violation of the law?"

And now indeed Anton moved uneasily; and so did we. "Yah. I been arrested."

Silence seemed to ring through the courtroom. There was a whispering between the judge and his clerk.

"What was the charge?"

"I hit a man who was no goot."

More whisperings with the clerk; then the judge said.

"Where did this take place?"

"In the olt country."

Oh! And now we breathed again.

"Who was the first President of the United States?"

Relief came into Anton's face. "George Washington," he said loudly and firmly.

Ah! our Anton had found himself. We were proud of him. Also we were beginning to see he was proud of himself.

The judge looked at his printed list again. "Can you be President of the United States?"

Hesitation here . . . more brow-wrinkling. "No, sir."

"Why can't you be President of the United States?"

Anton gazed at the ceiling, he pulled his chin. "Because I wasn't borned here."

AROUND THE HOUSE

To sprinkle clothes without spattering everything around, lay them out in the bathtub and drop the water down on them. After that, they can be rolled up and kept covered inside your washing machine until ready to be ironed.

Window cords will last longer and raising and lowering of windows will be easier if cords are dusted twice a year and rubbed with an oil-saturated cloth.

If you prefer some commercial brand of sand-soap — especially for removing paint—and it isn't kind to your skin, add a little petroleum jelly to the soap before you use it.

Pile fluffy mashed potatoes into an attractive shallow baking dish, sprinkle with paprika and brown in the oven just before serving.

Stale soap lasts longer than fresh soap. Buy in advance and remove the wrappers as soon as you get home, so the air can get at the soap while it's stored.

If hankies and other small flat articles start doubling back over the rollers when you try to put them through the wringer, squeeze some of the water out of the front end of the hanky with your fingers first, then feed it through.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

His Punch is His Signature

Was on the train up to Central City the other day and when the conductor came around, I asked him why their ticket punches make such odd-shaped holes in the ticket.

"Every conductor in the country has a different design for his punch," he tells me. "Some even show up a fellow's preferences. Now take mine. The hole it makes looks like a beer goblet."

Sure enough! Then he went on to say that the punch is just like the conductor's signature. Makes it easy to trace tickets... to check up if something happens.

From where I sit, even though your ticket is punched differently from mine, it still gets you where you're going. Just like people with their opinions. You might like coffee, another person, tea—and I'll settle for a temperate glass of beer. But what does it matter, so long as we respect the right of the other to have tastes and opinions? We're all trying to go in the same direction — towards a friendlier, more pleasant world for all of us.

Notice of Democratic-Farmer-Labor County Convention and Precinct or District Caucuses

Pursuant to Article VI, Sec. 4 of the constitution of the Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party, notice is hereby given that on Tuesday, May 2, 1950 at 8 o'clock P. M., Democratic-Farmer-Labor caucuses will be held at the legal voting place in each precinct or voting district in this county. These causes will remain open at least one (1) hour. In each voting precinct or district all persons who are citizens of the United States over 21 years of age, have resided in Minnesota for not less than six month, and who are otherwise qualified by Minnesota statute may participate and vote at these precinct or district caucuses.

The object of these caucuses shall be the election of delegates from each precinct or voting district in this County Convention notice of which is hereby given, to be held at the City Auditorium in Warren, Minnesota, on Saturday, May 13, 1950.

The purpose of this County Convention shall be the election of delegates to the State Convention of the Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota, to be held in the City of Duluth on June 3, 1950 at 10:30 A. M. The County Convention shall also elect a County Chairman, Chairwoman, Vice Chairmoman, Secretary and treasurer, elect or provide for the appointment of County, City, Village, Ward and Precinct Committees and, where necessary, elect additional members to the State Central Committee. Such Counties that have not already done so should provide for adopting of the DFL Model Constitution.

Each precinct or district of this County shall be entitled to one vote for the first 100 or fraction thereof cast for the Democratic-Farmer-Labor candidates for Presidential Electors in the 1948 General Election, plus one vote for each additional 100 votes or major fraction thereof cast for said candidates in said General Election.

Each precinct or district caucus shall determine the number of delegates that it wishes to elect. In the event that more or less delegates are elected than the precinct or district shall have votes in the County Convention then the total vote to which the precinct or district is entitled shall be fractionally divided between those delegates present and seated in the County Convention; provided, however, that not more than twice the number of delegates as the vote to which each precinct or district is entitled will be seated by the County Convetion.

IN RECENT MONTHS many a Minnesota editor has shown his concern about foreign iron ore discoveries. For instance, Norman E. Nelson, editor of the Cloquet Pine Knot, writes: "A new ore deposit, reputedly of higher grade than the best the Mesabi Range ever had, is wide open in Venezuela. Another development is the beginning of exploitation of the tremendous Labrador deposits." He concludes that "our main hope to avoid a collapse of our vital ore economy is the development of taconite."

MIGHT AS WELL FACE IT: Minnesota has no monopoly of high-grade iron ore . . . not any more.

We now face new competition—tough competition. The ores of Labrador, Venezuela, Liberia and Brazil are mighty fine ores—high in quality, abundant in quantity. And no doubt many a shipload will be bought by America's steel companies.

But that's no reason for selling Minnesota's ore industry short.

We, too, have just what the blast furnace needs. True, we haven't as much high-grade ore as we once had—but enough to last quite a time if it's conserved. We also have literally billions of tons of low-grade and taconite ores—which make perfectly good iron.

The only drawback is that these lower-grade ores must really be manufactured before they're usable. It's a costly process. Hundreds of millions of dollars may be needed to build the necessary "ore factories."

Where will this kind of money come from? The present producers of iron ore in this state. They're eager to get going on low-grade and taconite ore production. They're more than willing to invest heavily. But first, there's one thing they must know . . .

They must know that Minnesota will treat the iron ore industry fairly and squarely—that it will avoid ill-advised, excessive taxation that could make it impossible to compete with foreign ore.

Now's the time to do something about our new ore competition. Now's the time to help Minnesota's iron ore industry speed up its research and expand its operations.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

Good Seed, Soil Care And Plant Food Give Record Wheat Yield

THE teamwork of good farming practices, plenty of fertilizer and improved seed varieties helped Claude W. Thorp produce 74.5 bushels of wheat per acre on his farm near Clinton, Ill., last summer. This was one of the highest wheat yields ever reported.

Thorp's record crop came from a 25.2 acre field. Altogether this field produced 1,879 bushels of wheat. He seeded Pawnee wheat, a hard red winter variety developed by the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station. At harvest the wheat was weighed on state-inspected scales and the field carefully remeasured.

At seeding time the autumn before the wheat was drilled at the rate of a bushel and a half an acre, following removal of a soybean crop.

Thorp "poured it on" so far as fertilizer is concerned. He broadcast 500 pounds per acre of 8-8-8 fertilizer before drilling the wheat. Previously the same year, 400 pounds of 3-12-12 was added ahead of the soybean crop. He uses this heavy fertilizer program to build up the soil under a 4-year rotation of clover, corn, soybeans and wheat.

High School Senior Play May 5

The senior class of Newfolden High School has selected for their play, "The Campbells Are Coming," written by Jay Tobias directed by Mrs. R. Tunheim, and will be presented Friday evening May 5th.

It is a farce-comedy in three acts with all hillbilly trimmings. A false background is used as the effective technique for getting rid of an undesirable suitor.

The cast that has been selected includes The foxy Grandpa Brannigan, Shirley MacDonald, who engineers the hoax; her grandson, Dick, Robert Johnson, who impersonates the family idiot; her granddaughter, Betty, Gladys Ness, who is wild and shy as a rabbit; her old flame, Cyrus Scudder, Lester Lindquist who poses as Betty's suitor; and two hillbillies, Catalpa, Esther Benson, the worthless servant girl, and her worthless scamp of a father, Bildad Tapp, Joel Vattendahl. Ardelle Bring is Kay Jeffery Scudder, George Fricker is a dependable fellow that Kaye threw over for Kingston Campbell, Erling Huglen, an aristocratic young man who visits Kaye's home with his very snobbish mother Mrs. Augusta Campbell, Patsy Dyrud.

If you want an evening of fun be sure to see this play, May 5, at 8 p. m. in Newfolden.

With the approach of the fishing season and opening on May 13, many fishermen are concerned about the spring breakup. Fisheries managers in the Game & Fish division believe that spawning will be over by that date Past experience has shown that spawning can start early in April or the last week and will be completed during the first week of May. When it starts early, the spawning is slow; when it starts late, it is fast and short.

Spring Will Soon Come

Winter has not yet left here, which makes it the latest spring that can be remembered here. Snow fell Monday and all day Tuesday adding to the snowdrifts that were still here. Thief River flowed over its banks east of here overflowing the already soaked up land so that the whole country east to the river looks like a lake.

The hay shortage here is becoming bad. In spite of the bad haying weather last summer most of the farmers put up enough to last them thru a normal winter. But now everybody is out of hay and no hay to get anywhere.

Oldtimers tell us there were springs like this in 1896, 1903 and 1907. Also after one more week, we are to have good weather and that we are due some fine winters. Let's hope so.

FOR SALE — Northern grown Alfalfa. Fancy, Choice and Special grades. Free from noxious weeds. Fancy grade purity 99% and better. Germination all grades over 85%. PETERSON-BIDDICK CO.

Plane Incident Heats Up Cold War; German Rearmament Pleas Spread; Court Upholds Georgia Vote System

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

COLD WAR:
Heating Up

Russia had heated up the Cold war.

A United States air force navy Privateer had disappeared after a flight in which it was reported to have flown over Russian territory. The Russians claimed the plane had fired upon a Russian aircraft, and then had disappeared over the Baltic sea.

A WIDESPREAD HUNT by American officials was launched for the missing plane. Erroneous reports had it that life rafts from the plane had been found. The first reported rafts turned out to be only fishing boxes.

But later, a life raft was picked up and air force officials indicated a conviction it came from the missing plane, which had 10 crew members aboard. A British ship under command of Captain J. Henderson reported finding the raft and said it was partly collapsed. The air-supply bottle was exhausted and supply pockets were open and empty.

There were no signs of life and no mesages were found.

Had the Soviets shot down the plane, or so crippled it by gunfire that it crashed in the Baltic? That was the big question. Bigger yet was the question: "What would the United States do if it were developed that the plane was a victim of Russian gunfire?

THOSE were questions that would have to wait, however, until the answer to what had actually happened to the plane had been cleared up—if it ever could be cleared up.

Meanwhile, American tempers grew a little shorter with Russian tactics and there was no denying that the Cold War had taken on a degree or so more heat.

GEORGIA:
Unit Vote Stays

The county-unit vote determination system is unique in the United States because only two states use it. It is unique, too, in that it is found acceptable by city populations in these states, when its use gives votes in some rural counties up to 122 times more weight than those in city areas.

But, the U.S. supreme court has said the system is all right. In a 7 to 2 decision it refused to strike down the county-unit vote in Georgia. Maryland is the only other state employing this system.

JUSTICE BLACK and Douglas protested bitterly against the majority opinion, which was brief and unsigned. These two members of the court declared the action failed to plug what they called the last loopholes in the court's decision which gives Negroes the right to vote.

The majority opinion said that federal courts have no right to interfere with the way a state geographically apportions voting strength. It made no mention of any racial issue the dissenters saw in the case.

Two Georgia voters attacked the existing law. Under the system, each of Georgia's 159 counties is alloted a number of unit votes, ranging from six for the eight most-populous counties down to two for most of the counties.

THE CANDIDATE who receives the most popular votes in a county is awarded all its unit votes. The system, in that respect, works something like the electoral college.

ROYALTY:
Tough Going

Everyone has known for a long time that with the exception of England, royalty has been having a tough time. With the changing times have gone royal privilege and pomp but, chiefly regretful to royalty, the cash, too, has gone.

LATEST to join the ranks of impoverished noblemen was a German duke, Ernst August, of Coumebrland and Brunswick, father of a queen and cousin of a king.

Duke Ernst was really up against it. He was so badly off, financially, that he had to sell treasured antiques just to pay his grocery bills. Rare old relics of his family's medieval splendor were to go under the auctioneer's hammer.

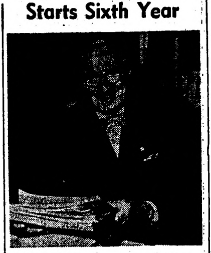
Said the duke, philosophically, "Of course, I'm sorry to part with these things, but it just can't be helped." The duke was down to his last two castles—and one of them is a war ruin.

TV FOOTBALL:
One Show Over

Football fans who have been following Big Ten football via television screen, will find that this fall the show's over. They'll have to go out to the stadium now, instead of sitting cozily at home and following the play.

Big Ten athletic directors, meeting in Chicago, voted to ban live television of their schools' football games for this season. The action may cost the conference $200,000.

Starts Sixth Year



Harry S. Truman, looking trim and fit, has started his sixth year as President of the United States. The Chief Executive, 66 on May 8th, rounded out his fifth year with a renewed determination to win the "cold war" with Soviet Russia.

GERMANY:
A Repetition?

Any mention of rearming Germany makes cold chills run down the backs of those who remember how a beaten, dismantled Reich was permitted to come back and plunge the world into the most devastating conflict it had ever known.

THREE TIMES in the past 80 years, German war machines have struck swiftly and ruthlessly at the peace of the world. Had the Germanic hordes ever won a world conflict, something of what the vanquished might have expected is provided in the terms laid down by these conquerors of the French in 1870, when German troops stayed on French soil until every penny of reparations demanded was paid.

How the individual may have fared under the Teuton heel was revoltingly demonstrated by Hitler and his sadistic Nazis.

Now, all the great talk, the board planning, the global thinking is merging into one resounding chorus: "Rearm Germany!"

Joining this chorus was General Jacob L. Devers, retired chief of U.S. army field forces, who said in an address in Louisville, Ky., that western Germans "Would like to fight for us, under American officers, against the Russians," if war should come, and he added "They can fight like Hell!"

NO ONE disputes that. But recent history is too grim for such proposals to be received with general equanimity. Too many people of the world will remember that it was that very fear of possible Russian attack which led France and England to sit by with folded hands while Hitler flouted the Versailles treaty and served notice on the world that he was going to rearm Germany. "Let him go," seemed to be the whispered desire, "he'll serve as an excellent buffer against the Russians."

So Chamberlain went to Berchesgaden with his folded umbrella and came back hugging to his breast the miserable pledge of the Austrian madman of "peace in our time."

The world had a horrible taste of that kind of "peace." To rearm Germany creates a fearful possibility that the dose may be repeated.

STRIKE THREAT:
Old Issue Flares

Two big railway unions were ready to "review the whole case" of their Diesel-engine dispute with the nation's railroads. If the results weren't satisfactory to the brotherhoods, the country faced a major strike threat.

The argument was two years old and was easy to state. The unions felt that the adoption of Diesel-powered locomotives discriminated against manpower and insisted that an extra man be put on these locomotives, whether there was any need for him or not.

The railroads, on the other hand, have refused to do this.

Union leaders refused to discuss just how imminent a strike might be or when and in what matter it might be called. Instead, they indicated a review of the situation.

The union was in a highly strategic position. It was free to strike at any time, inasmuch as all "cooling off" provisions of the railway labor act have been exhausted.

Thunderjet

The air force's Republic "Thunderjet" was reaching out farther and farther to deal death and confusion to any potential U.S. enemy. The air force reported that the F-843's range has been increased to where it can carry out most types of missions more than 1,000 miles from base. The increased operation radius is available for straffing missions, bomber escort and hunting enemy fighters.

Davis Ranks With All-Time Stars

—By GRANTLAND RICE—

THE RETURN of Glenn Davis to football action brings back an old argument—who is the greatest all-around athlete of all time? It must be admitted that all-time is quite a spell on the calendar. So we'll add "since records have been kept."

Grantland Rice

The argument returns in force since Glenn Davis is among the leading nominees. He was Red Blaik's choice the last time I talked with the Army leader.

How good was Glenn Davis? Well he was a star at football, baseball, track and basketball for a starter. He wasn't merely good at these different games. He was among the best. "Glenn has the finest mental and physical co-ordination I've seen anywhere," Blaik said at the time.

Jim Thorpe? Jim was a star at football, track and baseball. He wasn't known as a basketball player. But the red man from Carlisle was a pentathlon and decathlon star at track and field where Davis was only a sprinter.

What about Elmer Oliphant, another famed West Pointer with an assist from Purdue? Oliphant starred at football, baseball, track and field, basketball, boxing and fencing. As we recall his day and time. Elmer won seven major medals at West Point.

"He was brilliant at practically everything he tried," Colonel John McEwan said recently. The colonel ought to know. He coached Oliphant in football. "He was an amazing product. Maybe he was also a fine skier and swimmer. I've forgotten. At the moment I can't remember any game that Elmer couldn't play well."

Barry Wood of Harvard was another powerful entry in these stakes. Wood starred at football, baseball, hockey and tennis. Jackie Robinson, the Dodger infielder, ranks high at football, baseball, basketball, track and field. He was U. C. L. A.'s challenge to the field.

My favorite entry was Harry Fisher of Williams. Fisher starred at football, baseball, basketball, track and field, tennis, golf, swimming and squash. He had a record of success in 10 major sports.

It will be interesting to see how far Glenn Davis can come back after a three or four-year absence from competition. At 25 with all his natural ability he should be able to make it.

Football's spring practice is under full steam with an abnormal number of candidates on hand to fill a long parade of gaps. In this list of missing stars you'll find such names as Doak Walker, Charlie Justice, Leon Hart, Emil Sitko, Arnold Galiffa, and too many others to mention.

In the 1949 scramble the Midwest again led the pack, an old-time custom. Notre Dame, Michigan and Ohio State were the three spearheads who took charge. The South and the Southeast were several notches off. The Southwest was in back of the Midwest. I'd say the East was close alongside the Southwest in front of the South and the far west.

After all, the east had Army, Cornell, Princeton and Dartmouth, a good match for anybody. The west coast had improved over past years, but the improvement wasn't too noticeable. There were strong signs, however, that the California sector, plus Washington, will be more formidable this coming fall.

The Southwest expects to have greater all-over strength, although few coaches will make any such claim. As spring practice begins warming up, the early signs favor Notre Dame, Army, Michigan, Tennessee, Oklahoma, Pittsburgh, Princeton, Dartmouth, Cornell, Texas and Southern California.

No other squad could lose as many good football players as Notre Dame has lost and have such an excellent autumn outlook. Notre Dame is still an odds-on choice to remain unbeaten. Frank Leahy's spirited competitors may not have the depth to go all the way unroped, but who is to head them off?

Army's two main tests are Michigan and Stanford. Army again will be a fast, powerful, well-coached squad, provided Red Blaik can dig up a few defensive replacements. His offensive strength is already in order.

Pennsylvania loses many good men from a thin squad and the present outlook isn't any too happy. But the Red and Blue has the habit of having good teams, although her domination of the Ivy league was checked last fall by Cornell.

The hired man on a farm went on his first trip to the city. He returned wearing a scarf pin set with at least four carats bulk radiance. The jewelry dazzled the village belles, and excited the envy of the other men. His employer bluntly asked if it was a real diamond.

Household Hints

Use For Margarine

To color margarine for table use, put the electric mixer to work. Then, without cleaning the stray margarine off the mixing paddles, use the mixer for whipping the mashed potatoes for the evening meal. Thus, the stray margarine ends up in the potatoes.

Cleaning Frying Pan

If a frying pan is exceptionally greasy and must be washed. fill it with soap, hot water and ammonia and let it soak awhile first.

Counteracting Salt

If you get too much salt in the soup or gravy, counteract it by adding a teaspoonful of sugar and one of vinegar and cooking it a while longer.

Soda for Plates

Sweet Potato Color

As soon as they're peeled, raw sweet potatoes have a strong tendency to turn color; this can be prevented by keeping them in ice-cold water until ready for cooking.

Radish Roses

For making roses out of radishes and other fancy garnishes, it is much handier if a penknife is used instead of a paring knife.

Grind Bread Crumbs

When bread crumbs are to be used for frying, put stale slices of bread through the meat grinder and mix the crumbs with equal parts of flour.

WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR . . .
by HOMER CROY

A prodigal son of northwest Missouri, Homer Croy drove along a country road amid the scenes of his youth. As he sees familiar places, he remembers happy times with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he'd ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; the Kennedy children, Ida, Lucy and Harlan. He remembers the Welcome Party for the Delinskys, newly arrived from the old country, and the shower their neighbors gave them after their farm home had burned down. Then there was the time the neighbors went to the courthouse to see Anton Delinsky naturalized as an American citizen. But the thought, the fear, which was in everybody's mind was: "What if he should fail to pass?"

CHAPTER XVI

"Correct!" And now we breathed again. "If you wanted to see the President of the United States, where would you go?"

Anton looked up, he looked down, his eyes went desperately to Newt, but Newt could not help him, great as was the temptation.

"Down to the train."

"No! The correct response is: 'I would go to Washington, District of Columbia, where the President of the United States has his official residence.'" The clerk's pen scratched something damning on the paper while Anton stood in miserable silence.

"Why do we celebrate the Fourth of July?"

Anton's eyes opened proudly. "Because that was the day we licked the damned British."

And now the judge himself was stumped; finally he said: "The court holds the applicant has grasped the main idea."

Anton nodded thankfully.

More paper consulting, a great deal of turning back and forth. "Do you, Anton Delinsky, believe in taxes?"

"Yas," said Anton firmly, and we breathed thankfully, for we were living and dying with our Anton.

"Do you believe in constitutional government?"

Anton paused . . . those big words. . . . But he could see the answers now were Yes.

"Yah."

The judge consulted the list again. "Do you believe in polygamy?"

"Yah."

A most dreadful and devastating silence came into the room; we hardly knew ourselves, what the word meant, but we knew the answer was wrong.

And now Newt must speak whatever the result might be. "Excuse me, Judge, but he don't know what it means. Tell him it means havin' two wives."

Bang! went the gavel. "Silence in court. The question has not been answered correctly. Record the applicant's answer."

The clerk scratched in the dreadful silence.

There were other questions and answers. Anton seemed to be doing better and our hopes rose. More whispering between the judge and the clerk, then the judge said for Anton to raise his right hand. Anton's sun-browned paw went up, and he repeated after the judge the oath of allegiance. We heard the impressive words "abjure," "fidelity," "foreign prince or potentate . . . particularly to Nicholas II, Czar of Russia." Then the judge said: "I now declare you, Anton Delinsky, a citizen of the United States, with all the rights and duties belonging to a citizen. Mr. Clerk, you will issue a certificate of naturalization."

A warm feeling moved through the room, for we all sensed we had seen something very fine.

And now everybody was talking at once and shaking Anton's mighty fist. "American now," he kept saying over and over, displaying his "paper." "You sure are," said Newt, "but for a while we didn't think you'd make it, especially when you ran into that wife situation."

I'm Off to The University!

At last we were in our rigs and starting home. Work to do. Always work to do. The water tower fell away. Sadness came over us; when we could see it no longer we would be halfway home.

I was "off" at the university; but in a way, I wasn't. Each week I had Kennedy news; I'm sure my mother never wrote a letter that didn't have something in it about our closest neighbors. And every week, when the home paper came, she carefully clipped every item that had to do with any of our neighbors. My mother was not strong, for a heavy hand had laid hold of her. Every day some one of our blessed neighbors came to see her; and there she sat, by the window facing the road, waiting for them, her crocheted ruffled shawl over her shoulders. The neighbors never failed her. When two longs and a short ring sounded, she moved over to the low chair by the sewing machine and took off the receiver. It was considered manners not to interrupt the first part of a conversation, for that had to do with the matter at hand; but later it was all right to join in. And she did. And they were glad to have her. When the conversation was over, she would put the receiver on its fork and move back to the window. Then tell my father the news. Or Phebe. Phebe was my mother's niece who lived with us.

When I came home I came home not only to my father and mother and Phebe, but also to the Kennedys. They were almost as proud of me as my own father and mother were. A neighbor off to the university! That was fine. And a boy who was selling pieces to the newspapers and farm magazines. Newt, especially, thought it was wonderful, for he was thinking of the One-Horse Farmer days. I was too young, then, and too little experienced to realize that the life, as depicted in the One-Horse Farmer, had entered deeply into me. But Newt appeared disturbed. It was nice for me to write pieces for the paper, but I wasn't goin' to keep it up, was I? "I'd hate to see you drift away from farmin'. There's nothing like havin' your own land under your feet. And bein' your own boss. I don't know anything in the world quite like it, Homer."

At the moment he said it I didn't either. That earnest look, his utter sincerity, his abiding belief in farming. But, in spite of this, he sometimes became discouraged. This was when the crops drowned out, or the heartbreaking droughts hit our section. "Yes, it's a bit discouragin' like, but we'll make up for it next season."

At the university, the land was not part of me; no one talked it; it was hardly mentioned. Sometimes I thought I had outgrown it. But when I got back home and skinned down the road to Newt's—well, then I found I hadn't. Soon we would be knee-deep in talk; the university slid away. I was living life again with Newt, my childhood hero who was still my boyhood hero.

The man was nice-looking, a bit on the handsome side, and seemed strong and was dependable-looking.

Meantime, Newt's family was growing up, too. Harlan had even seen fit to go off to school; he wanted to be a dairy farmer, he said. Go off to Minnesota or Wisconsin, he said, where dairying was done in a big way.

Lucy had gone to school, she was now the best "declaimer" in the county; no meeting, or entertainment, or social was considered complete without Lucy on the program. Then came their exciting family event; she went off to study so she could "travel" with a chautauqua.

With Ida it was a case of having too many beaus; and being too good-looking. And too impulsive. The newest beau always seemed the best. Neighbor girls her age had gone on to marriage; some were busy raising families. She was still the belle, but also still unmarried. And yet the best looking girl in our section. Impulsiveness was deep in her. Sometimes the neighbors said she would come to no good end, break her father's and mother's heart.

Cars were plentifully darting up and down the road now. Grandpa could sit on the front porch and see a car smoke by and never mutter a word. Yes, time was moving along. Changes, changes all the time. That was the way Newt said it. To any outsider—to a person who didn't know life in the corn belt—there might not seem to be any changes. But to us, who lived them every day, there were many and great changes. No farmer, when he went to town, talked about how much mud had rolled up on his wagon wheel. And the old narrow-rim wagon tire was being replaced by the four-inch tire meant especially for road building. Farmers didn't haul their stock to the shipping points as they once had; men who lived in town took contracts to do that.

A Stranger Asks Newt for a Job

Once when a farmer had wanted to "haul," he had notified the neighbors and they had all come with their wagons—such squealing as you never heard. All gone; professional haulers had taken away the excitement of hog-hauling day. It was mechanical now. A farmer gave an order to the professional hauler; the professional took charge; the farmer hardly threw a bucket of water on the panting hogs. When it was all over, that night or the next day, the farmer made out a check to the professional hauler. No fun any longer. Even Newt, who got more fun out of life than anyone in our neighborhood, didn't look forward to hog-market day as he once had. Nor talk about it afterward. The farm—instead of being a kind of private estate, as it had once been—was becoming a land factory. Grow things; get them off.

Mrs. Kennedy was beginning to find fault with farm life. The life was too hard; the work was never finished, there was always some kind of trouble. Insects, crop failures, sick stock, cyclones, blizzards, sows smothering their pigs, the dreaded mastitis. Now and then she talked about leaving the old farm and moving to town. But Newt would not hear of it. They were farmers; they always would be. Grandpa sided with him. No Kennedy in his right mind had ever pulled away from the soil.

One day Something Happened. A man came walking down the road with a suitcase, turned in through the picket gate, clipped by the hollyhocks and stepped on the front porch. No one ever had to knock, for eyes were always out the window, every rig was seen on the road long before it passed the house. Here was a new person, a stranger, and he was lugging a suitcase.

Mrs. Kennedy went to the door. The stranger took off his hat which wasn't quite what our men would do.

"I'd like to see the man of the house."

"I guess he's at the barn. Would you want to go out and see?"

The long and short of it was that he wanted work. Newt leaned against a salt trough and studied him. The man was nice-looking, a bit on the handsome side, and seemed strong and was dependable-looking. About thirty years old.

Never in his life had Newt got a hired hand this way. The usual method was to go to town and leave word at the Red Star, or at the farm loan and abstract office, that he was looking for a hand; then he might get one or he might not. And the usual way was for the hand to come riding down the road on horseback, with a valise balanced on either side; or he would come in beside him. But here was a man who was walking and carrying his suitcase.

"Where you been working?" asked Newt.

"In Gage County, Nebraska."

Newt studied him carefully, weighing and estimating. But he mustn't be too forward. "How are crops?"

"They were good when I left. It's a good farming section through there."

"Why did you move on?"

That was enough to settle anybody with Newt. "I guess you get such people now and then. How much are hands drawing out there?"

"I was getting twenty-four."

Mystery Surrounds New Hired Man

Newt nodded understandingly. That was fair. Prices were going up all the time. "Sundays? What about Sundays?"

"I got every other one off."

Newt nodded again. That was fair.

"I want every other Saturday afternoon off."

That, too, was fair.

"Milking. What about milking?"

"I'll help with the milking."

That was as much as anyone could expect.

"Your hands look on the white order," said Newt.

"Oh!"

Now came a point the man was firm on. He would have to ask for a good riding horse to be put at his disposal.

That seemed all right, too, since he didn't have a mount.

At last it was all settled and the man moved into the room next to Grandpa. His name was John Craig, he said, and by the end of the first meal the whole family was glad they had him. He had good manners and spoke nicely.

The first suspicion came that afternoon. Newt told him to move the hay frame to the feed lot. As he was going through the gate he jammed one corner of the frame against the gatepost. Newt hardly knew what to think of this; still it might happen; the man might have his mind off his driving for a moment. The next was when Newt told him to harness the mules and saw the man walk into the stall without first speaking to the mule, or putting his hand on it. Still that might happen, too. Some hands were careless, which was why so few rose to be landowners.

But he was a willing worker. No holding back, or resting the team too long.

Usually, when a day's work was over, a hand sat around with the family reading, or playing checkers. But this one didn't. Instead, he mounted Newt's riding horse and cantered off. The neighbors began to report seeing him in strange and unexpected places. But Newt could hardly ask into this, for it wasn't his business.

More Nitrogen Gives Bigger Grain Yields, Extra Pasture and Hay

INCREASED use of nitrogen fertilizer offers big opportunities for producing higher yields of small grains and more pasture and hay crops, declared Prof. C. J. Chapman, extension agronomist of the University of Wisconsin.

Prof. Chapman cautions, however, that nitrogen will give its crop boosting results only where the soil has a solid foundation of minerals built up by regular additions of phosphate and potash fertilizers and by a crop rotation that includes well-fed, deep-rooted legumes.

Citing examples of small grains' response to nitrogen, where phosphate and potash are in good supply, Prof. Chapman reported that 500 pounds of 0-20-20 made a yield of 56 bushels per acre on one farm. But when 100 pounds of ammonium nitrate was added, yields were pushed up to over 91 bushels per acre.

Chapman said it is profitable to use some nitrogen on small grains at seeding time, but liberal additions of phosphate-potash fertilizers are needed where seedings of clover and alfalfa are made. The seedling legume plants make a vigorous start early in the growing season and thus withstand competition from the heavy growth of straw due to the nitrogen.

Know about Minnesota's newest industry?

"It is a good thing for the state's economy that the taconite iron ore program is being pushed," writes Gerald H. Coy, editor of the Albert Lea Tribune. "It will be a brand new industry in itself. While this program is still an infant, far-reaching plans should be made now for its growth in a way that will benefit the people of the state and the industry. We hope the proper taxation structure will be given consideration."

Coy

ALL ACROSS THE STATE, thoughtful Minnesotans are talking about taconite. Perhaps you'd like to test your knowledge of what may soon become one of our great industries . . .

Q. What on earth IS taconite?

A. It's a hard virgin rock containing iron minerals. Minnesota has billions of tons of it—enough to keep a huge mining industry busy for generations.

Q. Why bother with taconite when we have high-grade iron ore?

A. Because our high-grade ore will not last forever. At present consumption, it could be used up in a couple of decades. That's why the iron ore industry wants to turn to low-grade and taconite ores, to extend the life of the industry in Minnesota.

Q. Why should people like Mr. Coy—far from the iron range—care about taconite development?

A. They know that taconite production could mean big things for the entire state. New jobs—because taconite ore must be virtually manufactured, not just shoveled up. Important business for other Minnesota industry—because manufacturing this ore will call for more plants and tools, more power, increased markets for farm products, more supplies of all kinds.

Q. Then why not go ahead with taconite?

A. The present producers want to do just that and are weighing the business risks involved. Already they've sunk millions in research. But before they put up the hundreds of millions more required for plants and equipment, they want to be sure their industry will have as good a chance as any other industry in the state to recover its investment.

Q. What do the producers ask?

A. They ask only that their industry will be treated like other Minnesota industry—that fair and stable tax policies will prevail—that high-grade, low-grade and taconite ore will not be priced out of the market by ill-advised legislation—and that Minnesotans recognize that their iron ore industry, for the first time, has serious competition.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

Can Pool Orders for Ewes

A plan to help Marshall County farmers get breeding ewes for this coming year was explained by County Agent Forbes today.

The plan calls for pooling of orders for Montana yearling and aged ewes.

Local orders will be lumped together and forwarded to Montana, where entire bands of sheep will be purchased in carload lots. Animals will be brought to a central location in the county. There, farmers can pick up their individual consignments.

Forbes listed three advantages in the plan. It makes buying breeding stock convenient for busy farmers. Purchasing by bands cuts the cost of the ewes. And pooling orders reduces transportation costs.

Both yearling and full mouthed ewes can be bought. The year-The yearlings are black-faced animals. They will be available in July. The aged ewes are white faced and can be gotten after lambs are weaned in mid-October All animals will be carefully sorted for soundness of mouth and udder

Farmers wanting yearling black-faced ewes are asked to turn in orders to Forbes by Mid-May. Orders for full mouthed white faced ewes should be in by mid-August.

W. E. Morris, U Farm extension animal husbandman, who is helping sponsor the program, feels this it a good year to increase or start a farm sheep flock, Sheep numbers are lowest on record

The lamb and wool outlook is very good for the farmer who has the feed and facilities to handle a sheep flock, he told Forbes.

Fishing Season to Open May 13

With the approach of the fishing season and opening on May 13, many fishermen are concerned about the spring breakup. Fisheries managers in the Game & Fish division believe that spawning will be over by that date Past experience has shown that spawning can start early in April or the last week and will be completed during the first week of May. When it starts early, the spawning is slow; when it starts late, it is fast and short.

—WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS—

Chiang Loses Half of Nationalist China With Fall of Hainan Island; Editors Urged to Join Truth Drive

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

NATIONALISTS:

Half Remains

Any hope the western world may have had that the march of communism in the Far East had been checked vanished as Chiang Kai-shek ordered the evacuation of Hainan island. Thus, one half of Nationalist China became Communist territory, and the West listened for the first rumors of the invasion of Formosa.

It was an embarrassing defeat for the Nationalists, who, having previously boasted of victories over the invaders, found it necessary to report in the next breath complete defeat.

Observers said the Nationalists simply "counted their chickens" before they hatched, and, that the Hainan command deliberately put out false news to prevent panic and enable prominent leaders to flee the island.

Whatever the cause, General Chiang found himself minus five armies, totaling some 125,000 men, 13,500 square miles of territory, and rich deposits of iron ore, coal and petroleum.

MOST surprising angle in the Nationalist's defeat, in the eyes of western military men, was the comparatively small number of Communist invaders, estimated at 10,000 to 15,000 men. Chiang's armies outnumbered them almost 10 to 1.

Speculation was immediately rampant on possible exaggerated Formosa defenses. Further, in some quarters, the fall of Hainan was called the beginning of the end of Nationalist China.

EDITORS:

Truth Campaign

Editors of the nation—little and big—have been asked to join the greatest campaign in the world today—"campaign of truth."

President Truman, speaking before the American Society of Newspaper Editors, said we must make ourselves known as we really are—not as Communist propaganda pictures us. We must pool our efforts with those of the other free peoples in a sustained, intensified program to promote the cause of freedom against the propaganda of slavery."

Then the President told the editors something they already knew, but no doubt liked to hear:

"There is too much nonsense about striped trousers in foreign affairs. Far more influence is exerted by the baggy pants of the managing editor."

The editors, in general, were inclined to agree. Although the individual policy of their newspapers might or might not be pro-administration, it was high time the United States counteracted Communist propaganda with truth.

In a nutshell the President argued Soviet propaganda constantly reviles the United States. The big problem is to tell the peoples of the world exactly what Americans are like.

At home the editors are the all-important bridge between the American people and world affairs by informing them "well and completely," the President added.

HOSPITALS:

16,000 Beds

The house of representatives voted $279,000,000 for veterans' hospitals and a $1,000,000 coast guard reserve training project.

The vote was startling in two repects: (1) The house passed the bill with a record vote; and (2) the congressional "economy drive" which has prevailed in Washington during the past year got a sudden jolt which was not unexpected.

As passed by the house, the bill directs the Veterans' administration to proceed with construction of 16,000 additional hospital beds for war veterans.

With veterans of two world wars demanding and needing increasing hospital aid, congressmen agreed to the need, but shook their heads at the idea of tying a knot in the economy trend becoming more popular as a presidential election year nears.

It took no longer, incidentally, to pass the million dollars for the coast guard than it did to enact the hospital bill. That, some observers point out, would indicate that perhaps the congressmen have not entirely forgotten their economy drive.

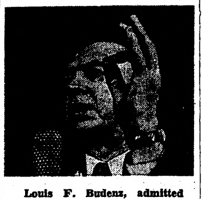
HOUSING:

Urge Rent Control

Undoubtedly the most unpopular move of the administration since World War II has been the continuation of rent controls. Now, several officials have urged extension of rent controls beyond their scheduled end June 30.

For all their yelping, and, although President Truman has called for a year's extension, there is a general feeling that this time the congress will let the law lapse.

Secret Witness



Louis F. Budenz, admitted ex-Communist and sometimes called Sen. Joseph McCarthy's secret witness, testified before senate loyalty probers that Owen Lattimore, Far East expert, was a member of a "Communist cell" in the Institute of Pacific Relations. Next move is up to Mr. Lattimore.

BOMBS AWAY:

Russia Watches

The United States air force display of air power, punctuated with the explosion of heavy demolition bombs, jet planes, rockets and flaming oil bombs, was a big success for the 1,500 spectators, including prominent business and civic leaders and Harry S. Truman.

It was being watched in other quarters, too, and the administration made no secret of its hope that those quarters would be duly impressed. In fact, the government hoped the explosions at Fort Benning, Ga., would be heard across the Atlantic at the moment when Russian and American relations were at their lowest point.

U.S. State Secretary Dean Acheson, who recently has ceased pulling his punches, along with other high government officials, hoped the display would warn the Soviet Union that the United States was prepared.

To demonstrate his hope, he said a few days later: ". . . the country must be strong, with defenses organized wisely and prudently, and with all possible resources, for protecting the area in which this freedom abounds."

Of the bursting bombs and mighty guns Mr. Truman said nothing when asked what impressed him most.

DECORATIONS:

War or Peace

From action of the United States senate some wondered if this country was at war or peace as that high body decorated 10 airmen who lost their lives in the Baltic, presumably shot down by Russian fighters.

To spectators who gazed down upon the senate floor it was obvious the senators were in no mood to dally, but filled with a fury that had not been experienced since a declaration of war against Japan.

With such denunciations as "criminal" and "barbarous" and demands that steps be taken to prevent another such occurrence, the senators voted praise and decorations for the airmen.

Numerous foreign affairs experts took special note of the state department's protest to Russia, which said in part:

"The cause of peace is not furthered when the U.S.S.R. ostentatiously decorates Soviet airmen in a manner calculated to give the impression that they are being rewarded for shooting down a defenseless American plane."

All agreed that the prospects of a shooting war were not immediate.

AIR FORCE:

Chief Retires

The first Secretary of Air under President Truman's unification policy, W. Stuart Symington, has retired. And, as he departed, he said the Air Force fighting value has been cut.

He declared the Air Force combat effectiveness had declined in the last six months because of a reduction in number but its efficiency had increased.

"There is a tendency to mix up those two words—effectiveness and efficiency — and some misunderstanding has resulted," he added.

He had another view to express, also. He was convinced that a seventy-group Air Force was necessary. One could not overlook, however, the importance of economy "since the nation can be defeated by economic disaster as well as military disaster."

For that reason he had supported President Truman's forty-eight group program.

He had one parting observation on economy: He did not see how a balanced budget could be achieved with world conditions in the state they were now.

POLITICS:

Truman Tour

President Truman isn't giving his rivals a chance to cut down the Democratic majorities in both houses, most observers believed, as he planned what he called a "nonpolitical" swing through the West.

The "nonpolitical" tag that has been hung on the Truman tour has no one fooled. It is, no doubt, the official opening of this year's political campaign and will have a great bearing on the 1952 presidential election.

Observers are inclined to agree that five key objectives are in the back of the Democratic strategy:

1. In 1948 the Democrats swept to unexpected victory because of Truman's popularity. They don't want that popularity slowed down.
2. Visit and talk to the mid-Western farmers and thus extend the party's hold upon them.
3. Find candidates who, if elected, will back the Truman administration. This is felt necessary to offset the revolting Southerners.
4. Rescue and revenge enter into the tour in that an attempt will be made to save some party faithfuls and to punish a few enemies.
5. To bring about some discipline within the party itself in an effort to put on a united front.

PALESTINE:

Arabs Unite

Where there had once been strife among the Arabs of Palestine, now there is unity with the announcement that Arab Palestine and Trans-Jordan have united into a single kingdom.

The unity creates the Kingdom of Hashemite Jordan at whose head reigns King Abdullah Ibn El Hussein, on a basis of constitutional representative government, the announcement stated.

The unification notice was sent to the Arab states and was received in Israel without too much comment since Israel had an armistice agreement with the new kingdom.

However, Israel was not prepared to accept the annexation. Observers agreed that the move might prejudice future talks when all points concerning the ultimate peace are discussed.

GREAT WRITINGS:

Bible Not Included

Robert M. Hutchins of the University of Chicago announced the collection of the greatest writing of Western civilization in a 54-volume, $1,750,000 work, but the Bible was not included.

At first readers were shocked that the greatest work of literature in the history of man was not included, but were quickly relieved by Hutchins' reason.

The Bible, he explained, was not included because it already is universally available and almost universally owned.

The collection includes 443 works by 74 authors and was said to include the works acclaimed "indispensable to the liberal education of a free man in the 20th Century."

The first limited printing of 1,000 sets had been scheduled for that many patrons at $500 each.

COINS:

7 Billion

On October 9, 1792, with an audience that read like the social register, the first coins in the United States Mint were struck.

Present at that historical moment were George and Martha Washington, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Hamilton, and Thomas Jefferson. Since then seven billion have been minted.

Since that day 157 years ago, 31,141,346,843 pieces of money have been struck off, with a total value of $7,131,813,414.41.

Shorn Beauty

You wouldn't know it at first glance, but this is lovely Rosalie Bruce wearing the "lend-lease" head of hair provided by a Hollywood make-up artist. Rosalie's jealous husband, Edward L. Bruce, shaved off her waist-length tresses to keep other men from admiring her. She's a redhead.

Unworthy

Catholic circles continue to buzz with speculation caused by the sensation of Monsignor Franz Jachym refusing in front of the altar of Vienna's famous St. Stephen's church to be ordained as a Roman Catholic bishop.

He abruptly declined saying he felt himself "unworthy" of the office. Such a thing had never happened before in the history of the Catholic church.

by HOMER CROY

A prodigal son of northwest Missouri, Homer Croy drove along a country road amid the scenes of his youth. As he sees familiar places, he associates them with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he'd ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their daughters, Ida and Lucy; their son, Harlan, his boyhood pal. He remembers the time all the neighbors of Anton Delinsky, the "foreigner," went to the courthouse to see him naturalized as an American citizen. Then he remembers John Craig, the handsome stranger Newt hired as an extra hand. A careless but a willing worker, he aroused suspicions because he was reported seen in strange and unexpected places.

CHAPTER XVII

Then it was discovered he had a lockbox at the post office. That did, indeed, get Newt. Never in anyone's experience had a hired hand had a private post office lockbox.

Another thing was reported by a neighbor. He had seen Newt's hand go into the depot telegraph office. There were two telegraph offices; one in the center of town, the other at the depot. Most people went to the one in the center of town. Almost from the very first, romantic, emotional Ida was interested in the new hand. Every meal he sat across the table from her. They played croquet together; then began riding together. All the women and many of the girls still rode side-saddle, but not Ida. She was a good rider and she hopped a horse the way that all girls did later. The two would ride in the twilight through the osage hedge-lined lanes. Then they would come back and she would go to the house and he would put the horses away. They would sit in the barrel-stave hammock.

She shut off the other young men. Nobody now counted at all except John Craig.

Newt grew uneasy. "I wouldn't drive too fast, Ida. It's not goin' to harm you to know more about him."

She knew plenty, she said; and another breach widened between her and her father; and her mother, too, for that matter. Poor, foolish, impetuous Ida.

One day, unexpectedly, he said he was going to give up his job and move on. That was the way with farm hands; said he was going to Omaha to see his mother. Then Ida stunned the family by announcing she loved him and was going with him.

The same problem. The more Newt and her mother talked to her, the more determined Ida became. There was no harm in going with him to Omaha and staying with his mother, she said. Then, as soon as it could be arranged, they would be married.

What could Newt do? He must do something. And that's exactly what Newt did. "I've been wanting to go to Omaha and I'll just ride along."

Ida didn't like this and John Craig didn't like it; nor, for that matter, did Newt like it. But he was going to do what he could for Ida.

On the platform, as the train pulled out, stood Ida's mother, Lucy, Harlan and old grandpa. They watched the train until it disappeared in the cornfield cut west of town, then started back to the spring wagon and the buggy.

The anxious family heard nothing from Newt the next day; nor the following. Three days passed. Then the farmers' phone rang. "If you folks haven't got anything special to do, you might throw the harness on the team and drive by the depot."

In no time at all Mrs. Kennedy and Harlan were in the spring wagon—and, joy to behold, there on the platform with Newt was Ida! Then was revealed the most astonishing story that had ever happened in our section. But Newt must be careful in telling it; mustn't hurt the girl's feelings. As they came close to Omaha, John Craig's front was not quite so confident; in fact, he was evasive. The climax came when he admitted that he did not have a mother in Omaha. Then it came out that their mysterious hired man was a detective. A detective working on a farm! It wasn't so hard to believe when the rest was known. There had been a railroad express car robbery and the detective agency had found that one of the men had an uncle near the Kennedy's, and that the suspected man came there, now and then, to hide. John Craig, operating from the Omaha office, had been sent to get a job near by so that he could watch the house and farm. And this accounted for the mysterious post office lockbox and for his trips to the telegraph office. But in the meantime, Ida had fallen in love with him and had promised to go with him to his mother's. But it was all over now; the team was jogging along toward home.

The spring wagon mounted the hill. Newt's heart beat happily, for on the seat beside him was Ida, and there, ahead of him, was his farm.

It's a Sad Homecoming

The heavy hand proved too much for my mother. A telegraph messenger boy came to the rooming house where I was at the university. I knew, as soon as I saw him.

I got on the Wabash train and sat in a straight-backed red-plush seat and looked out the window at the early signs of spring—the farmers following their teams in the gray fields, the cattle with their heads down trying to find grass, the pasture horses with ragged patches of shedding hair hanging on their undersides. I was coming home from the university.

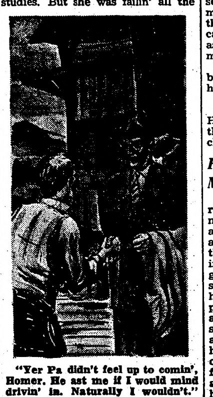
I got off at the wooden depot and looked around for my father. Instead, Newt came toward me, wearing his Sunday celluloid collar and the ready made tie which fitted over the brass collar button. He held out a big brown ham hand.

"Yer Pa didn't feel up to comin', Homer. He ast me if I would mind drivin' in. Naturally I wouldn't."

We went to the buggy at the row of hitch racks behind the depot. He spread the lap robe tenderly over my knees, then sat without it over him at all. Lap robes were for womenfolk and boys off at the university.

"Yer Pa ast me to acquaint you with some of the details," he said as we jogged along. His voice was hushed and a little choked.

"When you left after Christmas she opined she wouldn't ever see you again. She wouldn't let your Pa write you she was fadin'—thought it'd be disturbin' to you in your school studies. But she was failin' all the time. She would keep watchin' the clock to see when the mailman would arrive. Yer Pa would manage to be around the feed lots and'd go to the road and get your letter out of the box and bring it to the house and read it aloud to her. I'm glad you was a good hand to write." My heart choked within me and I was deeply thankful I had written regularly and at some length.



"Yer Pa didn't feel up to comin', Homer. He ast me if I would mind drivin' in. Naturally I wouldn't."

"It was a shock to the neighborhood when the line call went out, although we'd been expectin' it. Nobody in the neighborhood ever had more friends, nobody's goin' to be missed more. You had you a good mother, Homer."

I was so stirred, so moved, I could hardly speak.

My heart cried at that, too. I suddenly thought how little I had appreciated him, how rarely I ever gave him any thanks, and I resolved I would say and do things to show how much I loved him.

Newt Takes Charge Of the Funeral

Pa came out to the buggy, looking smaller and more frail than I had ever seen him.

"I've been waitin' for you."

We went in the parlor by the box. There was a sliding panel; he pushed it back.

We stood, silently, side by side, with Phebe at the foot—Phebe with her gold-rimmed glasses, turned up nose and long, slender face, like my mother's.

"I expect you'll want to greet the home folks," Pa said, finally. "They always speak of you with interest."

I went from one to another, shaking hands, receiving words of sympathy, my heart throbbing with the emotion that my boyhood friends and neighbors stirred in me. These were the ones I had gone to the white one-room school with, the ones I had worked in the fields with, gone to the cornfield church with, known so long and intimately.

The next day, the day of the funeral, Newt "took charge." Little groups of men stood in the drive lot and talked in low voices; when the time came for the preacher to speak, Newt went from group to group, silently motioning the men to come to the house. The windows were open, the men stood in the yard; the women, for the most part, in the house. The horses at the hitch racks shook their harness and whinnied. I feel choked as I set these words down, for it was one of the most poignant, touching moments of my life. When the speaking was over, Newt waved the teams into line and started them in proper order down the road toward Cain's. My father, Phebe, an aunt and I sat in our spring wagon; my father drove. The line moved away.

Cain's was set on a hill, with cornfields on two sides and a pasture on the other two. As the coffin was being carried in, horses came and looked over the fence.

When the preacher had said the final word, Newt gave a signal to two men and the three got their shovels from behind a tree. At last the grave was heaped and rounded.

We were back in our house which seemed so lonely without my mother in a rocking chair by the window.

There, on the center table, was something that had never been there before. My mother's picture in a frame made of colored yarn. The picture had been on the bureau in my father and mother's bedroom; now it was on the center table. I knew he had put it there.

Some of the neighbor women remained to get supper. Newt said, "I'll stay and help you chore, Amos."

The two marched off to the barn lot. After a while my father came back for the milk buckets. "You needn't help tonight, Homer." And right there was a change; education had made me just about worthless.

Newt poured the milk into the separator, as my mother had done so many times, while my father turned the handle. Then helped crock it and carry it down the steps into the cave, as my mother had done so many, many times.

Finally, he said, "I expect I'd better get down the road, Amos. I hear the calves bawling."

He wasn't quite gone.

"Maybe you and Phebe and Homer'd like to come in an' spend the evening with us tomorrow. A change of pasture'd be good for you."

Farming Becomes More Specialized

I looked at the Kennedy sitting room with eyes that had seen so many strange sights and new places and new people since I had gone away. The baseburner was down; the zinc was gone. There was a hole in the wall where the stovepipe had gone into the flue. The hole was stopped with a piece of metal which had strips on the side to hold it in place. A new stopper now; it showed a ship at sea. Very fine, everybody said, our people who had never seen a ship. But on the wall was the harvester calendar with the dates circled when the cows were to freshen. The room that was so near and dear to me, the room where I had been vaccinated, the room where the Delinskys had danced, where Newt in the old days had written the One-Horse Farmer, the room where the detective had courted Ida after the old folks had gone to bed, the room where Harlan and I had shot a big hole in the ceiling.

The warm, the hearty, good-natured, joke-making household lifted us out of ourselves. We played broom, we talked and laughed. Suddenly I would feel guilty for laughing. . . .

Phebe was the best quilter in the neighborhood. Mrs. Kennedy asked her how to make one of the designs and Phebe took the pencil and sketched it on paper.

Our home was lonely and deserted, but not quite as lonely as it would have been if we hadn't gone to Newt's.

The next day I started back to school. On the platform of the little wooden sanded depot again. Pa took my hand. "Write as often as you can, Homer. Always glad to hear from you."

Specialization was coming among us. In my youth a farmer had been just a farmer and had never dreamed of being anything else. But the coming of machinery and of changed conditions made it possible for a man to be more than a general corn-hogs-and-cattle farmer. A farmer was now a good "livestock man," or a good "corn raiser," or a good "small grain man." Some men were even becoming wheat farmers. But ours was not a real wheat country. As an example, my father, due to poor health, began to specialize in cattle; he became what we called a "cattle man." He bought calves, let them grow into steers, then turned them. Sometimes he bought "Westerns"—that is, thin, emaciated, starved-out cattle from the hard-pan section of Kansas or Nebraska—then fed them out. And now, as I was getting farther and farther from the farm and meeting people who didn't know farms, or farm life, I was surprised that many didn't know the difference between a calf and a steer, or a gilt and a gelding. But I was still coming home; still living the life I had known and loved; and seeing the boys and girls I had gone to school with; and listening so avidly to all that had happened to our neighbors. Especially to my favorite. I realized now Newt wasn't well educated; that he made all kinds of grammar slips. But, for that matter, I was still making them, myself. The whole thing had a curious effect. After I had been away and came back, at first I noticed his mistakes in grammar very much. But soon I didn't notice them. His heart and mind and spirit were the same. Yes, he was still my hero.

Mud Lake Gets "Cleared Up"

County officers got a notice from the government not long ago, asking them to change the name of Mud Lake. Seems it's a pond, not a lake, by government standards.

Because it lies entirely inside our town limits, we asked to do the name-changing ourselves. Figured we'd think up a brand-new name. Mud Lake's really not very muddy—sort of pretty, in fact.

County people said go ahead, so we held a Town Meeting. Everyone suggested something. Windy Taylor thought "Taylor Pond" would be nice, because his place borders it—for about 30 feet! But we finally decided to call it "Turtle Pond" in honor of the real owners.

From where I sit, naming that pond wasn't the most important thing in the world—but the way we did it was. Everyone offered his opinion and then the majority vote decided it. That's the way it should be—whether it concerns naming a pond, or having the right to enjoy a friendly glass of beer or ale—if and when we choose.

What iron ore means to southern Minnesota

Hunt

Far from the Mesabi Range, Editor C. J. Hunt of the Faribault Daily News takes a good look at iron ore problems. Whatever hampers mining operations, he says, "creates a problem not only for the mining communities, but for all state residents." For the farms of the South and the mines of the North have "a definite economic relation."

YES, MR. HUNT. When you look at the facts, it's easy to see what the iron ore industry means both to Southern Minnesota and the entire state . . .

IRON ORE MEANS JOBS

As you know, this industry is one of Minnesota's big employers. But indirectly, it is responsible for far more jobs. For every thousand men working in the mines, 7,500 additional people find a livelihood in related occupations. They are the workers and families of workers in the construction trades, in public utilities, in wholesale and retail trade, finance, personal services, manufacturing, government . . .

IRON ORE MEANS BUSINESS

Nearly half the tonnage hauled by Minnesota railroads comes from iron ore operations. These same operations have built Duluth-Superior into America's No. 2 tonnage port—have provided big, stable markets for the products of our farms, the goods of our merchants, the lumber of our forests, for heavy machinery, coal, electricity.

HOW ABOUT THE FUTURE?

Yet iron ore can mean even more to Minnesota—if this industry, by fair treatment, is encouraged to develop and produce low-grade and taconite ores.

These ores can spell thousands of new jobs. (It will take twice as many workers to produce the same tonnage when the industry swings over to the manufacturing of low-grade and taconite concentrates.) These ores can also spell vast markets for many Minnesota products, and continuing substantial tax revenues for the state.

But the iron ore producers can hardly be expected to invest millions in low-grade and taconite ore development until they see an even chance of recovering their investment. They ask only this—that their industry be treated like other Minnesota industries—that fair and stable tax policies prevail.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

A FAIR DEAL FOR MINNESOTA'S IRON ORE MEANS A GOOD DEAL FOR YOU

High School Senior Play May 18

The senior class of Newfolden High School has selected for their play, "The Campbells Are Coming," written by Jay Tobias directed by Mrs. R. Tunheim, and will be presented Thursday evening May 18th.

It is a farce-comedy in three acts with all hillbilly trimmings. A false background is used as the effective technique for getting rid of an undesirable suitor.

The cast that has been selected includes The foxy Grandpa Brannigan, Shirley MacDonald, who engineers the hoax; her grandson, Dick, Robert Johnson, who impersonates the family idiot; her granddaughter, Betty, Gladys Ness, who is wild and shy as a rabbit; her old flame, Cyrus Scudder, Lester Lindquist who poses as Betty's suitor; and two hillbillies, Catalpa, Esther Benson, the worthless servant girl, and her worthless scamp of a father, Bildad Tapp, Joel Vattendahl; Ardelle Bring is Kay Jeffery Scudder, George Fricker is a dependable fellow that Kaye threw over for Kingston Campbell, Erling Huglen, an aristocratic young man who visits Kaye's home with his very snobbish mother Mrs. Augusta Campbell, Patsy Dyrud.

If you want an evening of fun be sure to see this play, May 18, at 8 p. m. in Newfolden.

Crop Prospects Remain Good

Prospects for the 1950 growing season remain good, despite the unseasonally cold spring, reveals a survey of North Central States county agents and other agricultural experts. The survey was conducted by the Education Division of the Central Co-op Wholesale.

Responding to queries, which were sent to all county agricultural agents and other farm experts in the northern portions of Michigan. Wisconain and Minnesota, were the following; M. J. Thompson, Supt. Univ. of Minn. Northwest Fxperiment Station, D. T. Gussendorf. Ag. Agent. St. Louis County. Minn.; Manly Sharp, Ag. Agent, Douglas County, Wis; G. F. Beikkla, Ag. Agt. Hougton County, Mich; K. J. Moilanen, Ag. Agt., Ontonagon County, Mich., Russell E. Horwood, Supt., U. P Experiment Station, Chatham, Mich., and Arthur R. Welcott, Crops and Soils Specialist, U. P. Station, Chatham, Mich.

Every one of these experts, who based their analysis on written weather. soils and crop records reaching as far back as 70 years ago, cautioned the younger farmers not to despair, saying that there is plenty of growing season left and that nature balances tne score on weather, a cold spring balanced by a warmer-than-usual summer and fall. Veteran farm superintendent Mark Thompson, for instance, plucked out of his records the fact that even in 1907, with North Central States farming history's coldest April, a good crop was grown.

Among the "silver lining" in the late spring cloud pointed to by the agricultural experts were the following:

The lingering snow blanket was good for the meadows, because the moisture soaked in. Meadows occupy most of our farm lands;

The late spring forced a beneficial postponement of pasturing. Usually, our dairymen turn their cows out to pasture too early; then come lingering cold periods which retard pasture growth and make for poor pasture throughout the summer.

Late seasons reduce the frost hazards on fruits and perennial horticultural and field crops.

Due to the prolonged feeding period this spring, a stock culling program, in many cases much overdue, has been forced on the farmers.

Among the suggestions on how to best meet the situation after a late spring, the ag. men stated: Use the "hurry-up seed bed preparation" method of once-over plowing, fitting and seeding.

Seed the grasses and legumes without a nurse or companion crop.

Use fertilizers 4-16-16 or 3-12-12 liberally, at a rate of 300 to 400 lbs. per acre.

Use rust resistant varities of oats and barley.

Treat seed grain to control seedling diseases.

Increase the normal rate of seeding of small grains; on clay soils to 2½ to 3 busnels of seed per acre.

Be sure that the small grass seeds drop behind the drills and not in front as small seeds have little storage food, and in a late season need an immediate start. Some farmers have put a small piece of garden hose on the seed spouts, so as to be sure that seeds come out behind and then run the cultipacker or roller over the seeds to firm the soil.

Otter Tales
By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

I spend quite a lot of time every week working around newspaper plants (heating lead in linotype machines, running presses, etc.) so I'm pretty familiar with the tough job your local editor faces every day or every week.

And what amazes me is how these newspaper folks can stay so cheerful when they're practically worked to death! I dropped in at the North Dakota Press Association convention in Fargo last month, met and talked with a lot of editors and publishers, and came away with my faith in democracy really strengthened. As long as we've got a free press, run by independent-thinking newspapermen and women, your and my personal liberty and right to free enterprise is well protected.

Speaking of work—and there's nothing I like better—do you know how many different jobs I can do on the average farm? Well, this may surprise you, but there are actually 200 different possible uses for electricity on a farm. In fact, as of today, there are 201, because I just read that some fellow has invented an electrically heated mattress!

The High Cost of Living
The Low Cost of Electricity

It seems as though this mattress is heated just a few degrees above body temperature through the use of resistance wires. There is no danger of shock or fire, however. The Underwriters' Laboratories have made extensive tests and put their stamp of approval on it. And like all electrical appliances, it's cheap to operate.

Lots of folks don't realize it, but electricity is about the cheapest thing you can buy these days. Average light bills may be higher because more people are using more electricity in more ways. But according to United States Bureau of Labor statistics, the cost of electricity is down more than 10% over the 1935-1939 level, while cost of living figures, generally, are up 71%.

You just can't beat electrical living—for real convenience, comfort and economy. The only fly in the ointment, so to speak, is the fact that wiring in most homes is inadequate. Based on the increased use of electricity, about 90% of the homes in America need re-wiring.

So it's a mighty good idea to have YOUR wiring checked right now. Protect yourself against the danger of damaging fire and get maximum efficiency from your electrical appliances.

Let's Help Each Other

The old saying, "You scratch my back and I'll scratch yours" is still true.

This bank believes it pays to trade at home. Our neighbors are our friends. When we deal with our own people we help ourselves to prosperity. Let's keep our profits at home.

Help support the local people who pay our taxes, keep our schools running and contribute to our churches and other community activities.

Every dollar sent away from home helps other communities and to this same degree hampers local development. Our community will be just what we make it. Are we going to support ourselves or others?

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Lengthening Blanket

A blanket that's too short for the bed, or the occupant therein, can be made usable. Sew a 15-inch piece of flannel or flannelette to the bottom of the blanket. No one will notice if this end is tucked under and the rest of the blanket will be long enough.

Ginger Toast

Ginger toast is a nice change. Simply chop some preserved ginger, add a few drops of lemon juice, a tiny bit of water and stir and cook to marmalade consistency. Cut the bread into strips, toast, butter lightly and spread with the marmalade.

Raisin Donuts

Maple syrup and raisins! There's a delicious combination, especially when you serve it this way. Cook 1 cup raisins in ½ cup water until raisins are plump and soft. Add 1 cup maple syrup and 1 teaspoon lemon juice. Pour hot honey raisin sauce over donuts in individual dishes.

WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR

by HOMER CROY

A prodigal son of northwest Missouri, Homer Croy drove along a country road amid the scenes of his youth. As he sees familiar sights, he associates them with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he'd ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their daughters, Ida and Lucy; their son, Harlan, his boyhood pal. He remembers going home from the university to attend his mother's funeral and sitting again in the Kennedy sitting room, scene of the happiest times in his life. He remembers saying goodby to his father on the platform of the little wooden depot before his train pulled out. Then he thought of the revolutionary changes the age of specialization had brought.

CHAPTER XVIII

We spoke again of the One-Horse Farmer days. I had cut many of the pieces out and had them in a shoe box in the closet of my room at home; he was pleased, for even he himself hadn't done that. He would say, "Are you doin' any more writing now?" I was; I was always pecking away at something. I had sold a short story to The Black Cat for forty dollars and told him about it. He was immensely impressed. So was I.

I seem to be a long time arriving at what I wanted to put into this chapter; and that is about Ida, for I have neglected her these last few chapters. But there is much to tell; and I don't want these recollections to run on till any possible reader is weary of the whole business. So much to tell about any family, or person, you know well and—I hope—understandingly. That is, as understandingly as one human being can know another. For, as I see it, we are all great unsolved mysteries to each other. Sometimes I'm one to myself. Sometimes I'm afraid to probe into myself too deep, for human nature has some murky corners. Sometimes I think very well of myself and of my sincerity and honesty toward my fellow man . . . then, all of a sudden, I'm jerked back on the singletree with a pretty rude jolt.

Ida still had many beaus; buggies still stood in front of the house; the new hitch rack was gnawed. But, as so often happens, the pretty and popular girl wasn't the first to marry.

Some said Lucy would be married before her older sister was; and that, in our eyes, reflected on Ida. And now Harlan was intent upon girls; he might even marry first, people said. That indeed would be a joke.

One of the young men living in our neighborhood was Clarence Duncan. He had been born in the country and had always lived on a farm. He had always known Ida and had "gone" with her from time to time; but mostly it was between times. That is, when she didn't have someone more romantic than Clarence was. He was the faithful, the dependable type. And a good farmer. That was the important thing. He was a good "crop farmer." That meant he depended on his crops and on rotating them and on the varied assortment he could grow.

One morning at breakfast Ida said, "Clarence asked me to have him."

There was a surprised, breathless silence. "What did you tell him?" asked Newt, his heart beating fast.

"I told him I would think about it."

Newt spoke guardedly, for it wouldn't do to urge her too openly. "Well, Clarence is a likely young man."

A few days later she said, "I told him I would."

Peace and contentment came; it was as if the whole family had been under a strain; now it was over.

Kennedys Prepare For Ida's Wedding

And now began preparations for the most exciting event that had ever taken place in the Kennedy home. The house had to be cleaned and the yard had to be fixed up. Every member of the family was busy, except Grandpa—who had once been the busiest and most important person on the farm. He followed the others around, hoping someone would ask him to help. But no one did. Finally he would start slowly to the L. He had a hickory chair in front of the door into which he would lower himself. He would drop the last few inches, emitting a grunt. Then cross his old gnarled, misshapen hands in his lap. In a few moments he would be nodding. After a while he would wake up and sit watching the preparations. "It takes me back." A long, brooding silence. "I could do two men's work, then."

Nearly all our weddings were on Sunday; and so was Ida's—in the white house with the yellow trim and the lightning-rod weather vane. But now there is something new—a "wedding bower." An arbor built out in front of the house and leading to it like a covered bridge. The arbor is laced with plants and flowers. It was only occasionally that a farmer ever made such elaborate preparations; the city people did, but for the most part, bowers were a little too grand for farmers. Newt, however, had made this and there it was in all its loveliness. The drive lot is filled with rigs; horses are tied everywhere. Anton Delinsky comes up in a jaunty spring wagon and the children hop out. Anton still has an accent but the children haven't. There is a stiff formality—so strange and unusual at the Kennedy home where everybody always felt so free and easy. But not today.

Anton goes over and sits on a bench near Grandpa. They are great friends. Many times Anton has gone to the L to listen to the old gentleman talk covered-wagon talk and days on the trail—so different from the world Anton knew. Especially Anton had wanted to hear about the Indians; but they had been only skulking, chicken-stealing bands. Sometimes Anton had seemed disappointed. But no trail talk today. Wedding business.

Ida is hidden away as if she had the plague. But the other members of the family are there, each in uneasy clothes. Newt has a new pair of Congress shoes; vici kid. Sunday shoes and just about worthless, because they scuff and go to pieces so easily. But they are the fashionable shoe of the day; the kind the town merchants wear.

The men, for the most part, stay outside; the women go inside, for this is really women's business. Men are just about worthless today. But the preacher is inside the house, fluttering among the ladies. He has a tall white collar, a little, black, long-stringed bow tie and round celluloid cuffs.

There has never been a musical instrument in the Kennedy home; but there is today. An Estey organ has been brought from one of the neighbor's and there it is, on the porch, half smothered with flowers. In front of it is a round stool with a padded cloth seat. A child creeps toward it and gives the stool a whirl; round and round it goes, getting too short. The young lady who is going to play, goes out and rotates the stool back to its proper position, smiling, meanwhile.

Clarence goes around to the kitchen and creeps in as if he were a tramp trying to steal a pie.

Down the road, the last to arrive, is the groom, in the spring wagon with his parents, dressed up and scared half to death. Newt and Mrs. Kennedy hurry out to meet them and there is an immense amount of whispering and glancing toward the house. At last, all this is solved. Clarence goes around to the kitchen and creeps in as if he were a tramp trying to steal a pie.

Clarence's father stays outside with the men; Clarence's mother goes in with the women. As she passes among them she murmurs in a low polite voice, "Be so kind as to excuse me, please." Ida is marrying into the right kind of family.

Grandpa leaves the men and goes in the house with the women. Tired out from so much excitement and from so much waiting, he takes a seat in a corner and looks at the people with his misty blue eyes. So many strangers.

There has been much tiptoeing and whispering and nodding and pointing. Suddenly the organ begins to thunder; Lora Taylor's hands fly up and down the keys; the porch shakes; the stool teeters. Then out of the house comes the preacher, the prayer book clasped to his chest; but he is not smiling now. No indeed. No one ever looked more solemn. If the marriage goes on the rocks it won't be his fault.

Ida Makes a Beautiful Bride

He takes his place in the bower and stares straight ahead. The ladies creak across the porch and down the steps; their husbands edge forward and join them in the bower. One fool still has his hat on; his wife nudges him and he yanks it off. Grandpa comes slowly out, inches down the steps and takes his place in the bower; he puts one hand on the trelliswork. Goin' to take quite a bit of standing.

As suddenly as the music had started, it stops. There is a breathless, dramatic silence. . . . Then begins the slow measured, impressive "O Promise Me" and out from one door on the porch Ida comes with a lovely white veil over her face. Never, never in the world has a girl looked so beautiful; at least, it seems that way. She moves slowly, gazing straight ahead. There is a stirring from the direction of the kitchen—a slight shoving—and out another door comes Clarence looking as if lightning had struck behind him. He has a white geranium in his buttonhole and in his brown hands are cream-colored kid gloves. He also gazes straight ahead, just as the preacher instructed him to do. God! what if he should pitch down the steps? He swallows; his Adam's apple bobs up and down. That is all there is to show that he is going through the most trying—the most fearsome—moment of his life.

He and Ida join, like two rivers flowing together and making one. They creak down the steps and, in a moment, are before the preacher who begins to read from his hymnbook in a deep, impressive voice. The organ throbs softly; a horse whinnies; a woodpecker turns loose on the eaves. The preacher reads on and on . . . no one knows what he is saying and no one cares, but there is a great deal about Love . . . and Be of Great Faith . . . and Cherish Through All Time and Eternity . . . and Sickness and Death. In the midst of it, Clarence begins trying to push the ring through the split glove and over Ida's brown finger. Then suddenly the preacher says, "Do you, Ida . . .?" and Ida says out firm and strong, "I do," and the preacher says, "Do you, Clarence . . .?" and Clarence squeaks, "I do."

Immediately and instantly there is an uproar . . . at least it seems that way, so busy is everybody talking and laughing. Mr. Willhoyte lumbers forward and says humorously, "Do I get to kiss the bride?"

"No sir, you don't!" says Clarence, and everybody laughs.

Now "refreshments"—cakes and cookies and cider. The bower buzzes with jokes and laughter; every detail that has happened is talked over. Ida pulls off her long white elbow gloves and hands them to Clarence; he stuffs them into his pocket; already the man is learning his place.

Lizzie Delinsky—a nice-looking girl, now comes up to Ida and says ecstatically, "You are so lovely."

Ida smiles. "You'll be, too." Lizzie blushes.

Mr. Duncan—Clarence's father—pulls out his Noble Stag. "Clarence, I expect you'd better be thinkin' about the train. You, too, Ida," he adds embarrassedly.

Lucy, who admires Ida tremendously, seems to realize that Ida is going to leave her forever, and hovers near as if to delay the parting as long as possible.

But not Harlan. No, sir. No mush for him. "Go on, Sis; glad to get rid of you."

The House Has Never Seemed So Empty

Everybody goes out to see Clarence and Ida get in the spring wagon. Mr. Duncan is to drive them to town; then the two are to take the train for Estes Park. The younger children have been peeking out from behind the house and now come racing with old shoes and begin hastily to tie them on. No rice. For that's food.

Mr. Duncan again looked at his Noble Stag. "I expect you better get in, Clarence."

And now that the very moment has come, Mrs. Kennedy kisses Ida frantically and begins to cry. Newt kisses her, too; and so does Lucy.

The people go back to the house and now they talk about what a lovely wedding it has been. And what a good farmer Clarence will be. "I know Ida will be awfully happy," says Mrs. Willhoyte.

Tears come to Mrs. Kennedy's eyes; she wipes at the tears softly. "I hope so."

Mr. Willhoyte glances at the sun. "I expect we'd better go. Choring time."

At last they are all gone; no teams in the drive lot now.

"I suppose I had just as well take down the bower," says Newt.

Mrs. Kennedy nods, choked. He and Harlan set about the job. Nails squeak; hammers thud. Grandpa sits watching the dismantling.

Meantime, Grandpa was getting older. "All I do is putter," he said bitterly—Grandpa Kennedy who had once worked with such fierce energy. He still loved his feather bed; indeed, it seemed to have become even more precious. Times had changed; farmers were no longer sleeping in feathers in winter and on straw in summer, but on mattresses. Grandpa, however, would have nothing to do with mattresses. They were back killers.

He still had a foolish pride that no one but himself could sun his feather bed. Sometimes he felt that if he couldn't sun it, that'd be the end of him. He's be clear wore out, then. Nothing left but Cain's.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

May Day Disappoints Communists; New York Students Stage Riots; Gambler Admits Making $100,000

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

MAY DAY:
Disappointing

Outside Russia, May Day proved a great disappointment to the Communists.

In Berlin, for instance, where the Reds had hoped for strife, a half million people, drawn from both halves of the divided city, roared defiance to the Soviet Union and German communism and pledged allegiance to freedom.

At least 500,000 staged a spectacular demonstration in the British zone, dwarfing the well-organzied parade only a few blocks away. The Reds claimed that 800,000 participated, but east-sector police on the spot volunteered that the crowd was no more than 250,000.

And, although the meetings were next door to each other, there was no outstanding violence. A flurry of stone-throwing and a few fist fights was the extent of battle.

Of the speakers, aging Mayor Ernest Reuter of Berlin was the most popular. The crowd applauded and cheered when he said, "We Berliners are not afraid of anything."

In New York, the annual May Day parade was held to the tune of jeers from spectators and a few fist fights. About 13,000 persons attended the rally, the smallest number in years.

Also on the home front, the little town of Mosinee, Wis., experimented with communism for the day and a strong-armed "guerrilla" band ground 2,000 residents under the heel of a mock Communist boot.

The mayor was forced to surrender the town, the police chief was executed, a concentration camp was filled with hymn singers, churches were closed and food rationed. The residents of the little town felt it was well worth while.

All in all, the day outside Russia proved a great disappointment to the Communists. It was evident also, that the so-called "witch-hunt" underway in congress is making a great many Communists depart the company of fellow organizers.

GAMBLING:
Probe Continued

The battle against gambling syndicates conducted by cities throughout the nation and many states for years, and recently picked up by the senate, seemed to have reached the right road and moved along rapidly.

The senators, considering a proposal to bar the interstate transmission of information about gambling, hope to curb what some lawmakers say is a nation-wide crime syndicate founded on illegal bookmaking and slot machines.

1. He broke the law in running up a $100,000 a year net income from taking bets which ranged from $20,000 to $40,000 a day.

2. His interstate operations would be stopped if the government prevented the transmission of gambling information across state lines.

At one point in the investigation Erickson admitted that he was often "ashamed" of his activities.

LABOR PARTY:
Stands Test

Bulletins on the physical condition of ailing members of the house of commons have become a part of British humor recently.

Members of the labor party, however, are not finding them very funny, especially since the one-vote victory on a minor issue. By just one vote the government escaped an embarrassing defeat and a serious blow to its prestige.

The issue, a token cut to the transportation appropriation amounting to only 1,000 pounds, tied 278 to 278. The chairman of the house, Laborite James Milner, cast the deciding vote on the government's side.

As a result of the narrow escape, English political observers said they expected Prime Minister Attlee to enforce even stronger discipline on attendance of Labor members in the house.

Observers said that the vote also gave a true picture as to just how narrow the balance of power in the British government has become.

BELGIUM:
Crisis Again

For the third time within a year the Belgians will vote on the question of the exiled monarch's future.

The new election was ordered after the collapse of a final effort to constitute a new coalition government of social christians and liberals for the recall of King Leopold III.

Observers predicted that the next election would be as indecisive as the recent referendum.

Students Riot

Holding a boy firmly by the collar, a New York mounted policeman is shown taking into custody on of the thousands of high school students who demonstrated and rioted in Foley Square as a follow-up of their support of teachers' salary and other demands.

STUDENTS:
Stage Riots

Thousands of New York high school students staged repeated demonstrations—some outright riots—demanding higher pay for teachers and portesting a virtual halt in after-school activities.

As many as 5,000 students repeatedly rushed city offices and clashed with police. They shouted and shoved, threw stones, stuck pins in police horses, set off firecrackers, and made trouble in general.

New York's school problems can be traced directly to the teachers who have demanded more money. As a result, $13,000,000 was added to the school budget, but Mayor O'Dwyer cut this figure to $7,000,000. The teachers then called a modified strike, keeping classes but refusing to supervise "extra-curricular" activities such as commencement exercises, senior dances, plays, proms and class days.

As a result, the students staged demonstrations which at first were taken lightly, but soon gave evidence of brilliant organization and direction.

Said Federal Judge John C. Knox of Southern New York district court: The photographs of jostling mobs "will bring joy to the inmates of the Kremlin"; the riots are "daring and disgraceful."

GERMANY:
People's Police

Two Communist storm troopers, who wandered into West Berlin, confirmed long-standing British and American suspicions that the Soviet Union was rearming East Germany.

The two strays, armed to the teeth, pleaded guilty in a U. S. court of entering the section in para-military uniform. Weapons included army pistols, machine guns and assault rifles.

The men said they were members of the Soviet zone "People's Police" but that it is in reality an army. Members of the organization get short training as policemen, including law courses, then go in for tanks, armored cars, light and heavy machine guns, grenades and assault rifles.

As if in answer to Communist plan, the United States defense department answered the following day that 146,500 army troops are maintained by this country in west Germany.

The department said nearly 600,000 men, more than 40 per cent of the country's total all-service armed strength, are on duty outside the United States.

Of the troops in Germany, an army spokesman said, 85,000 are concentrated in Berlin. The defense department has long operated on the theory that Russia would like nothing better than a chance to take over Berlin.

WAR:
Not Imminent

The world was glad to hear the words of Chairman Connally, of the senate foreign relations committee, that there seems to be no immediate danger of war with Russia.

The Texan said in an interview: (1) Communist pressure would force the United States to abandon South Korea; (2) the Baltic plane incident has not hastened war between this country and Russia.

BUY U. S. SAVINGS BONDS

Political independence, our "Declaration of Independence," was proclaimed to a young and vigorous nation on July 4, 1776, when citizens were summoned to Independence Hall plaza in Philadelphia by the stentorian tones of the historic Liberty Bell. The actual tone of the Liberty Bell will again be heard throughout the nation during the U. S. Savings Bonds "Independence Drive" May 15-July 4. This time it will peal forth a message of financial independence for the individual, a reminder to every citizen of the importance of savings and Savings Bonds. They make you better equipped to face the future, secure in the reality that yours will be a better, more comfortable future.

How Minnesota can keep its reputation

Curtis

"Many new deposits of iron ore have been discovered in Venezuela and Labrador which have gotten much attention," writes J. Harold Curtis, editor of the St. James Courier. "But we here in Minnesota are more interested in finding new deposits right in our state and better ways of getting it out. We want to keep our reputation as a great natural deposit for this ore."

NOBODY WOULD QUARREL with you on that, Mr. Curtis. And fortunately, Minnesota CAN keep its reputation as a great ore-producer if all of us who live here understand our iron ore problem.

First, Minnesotans should know our high-grade ore—the ore that made this state the world leader in iron ore mining—has melted rapidly in recent years.

But there's nothing tragic about this fact. It so happens we are blessed with virtually boundless deposits of low-grade and taconite ore.

These ores can and should be used. If they're used on a commercial scale, everybody in Minnesota will gain . . .

- Workers will gain because more jobs will be created (producing concentrate from low-grade and taconite ores calls for twice as much manpower per ton, compared with high-grade ore).
- Businessmen will gain because, with greater employment, there will be larger markets for what they make and sell.
- Farmers will gain because there will be larger markets for what they grow.

Since Minnesota has so much to gain, Minnesota should do everything in its power to encourage its iron ore producers to get started right now on production of low-grade and taconite ores. How?—

By assuring the iron ore industry of fair treatment, both now and in the future. By treating this vital industry as it treats other major industries. By establishing and maintaining a stable, reasonable ore tax policy.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

A FAIR DEAL FOR MINNESOTA'S IRON ORE MEANS A GOOD DEAL FOR YOU

Remove All Rust

Metal surfaces should be sandpapered to remove any roughness before applying a new coating of paint or enamel. Any traces of rust should be completely removed or the rust will continue its destruction. Where the surface is sanded down to the metal itself, it should be given a first coat of metal primer before the finishing coats are applied.

Use of Red

Red is a color to be used judiciously. On too large areas it is overpowering, irritating. Used as an accent color, it lends life and gaiety to less interesting surfaces. Many women like to use it as an accent color in kitchens, but such a warm color should not be used in too large quantities in a room that is so frequently overheated by meal preparation.

Honor the Dead-Don't Join Them

"Honor the Dead - - don't join them" is the motto suggested for Memorial Day week-end by A. V. Rohwoder of Duluth president of the Minnesota Safety Council.

Memorial Day is a time when we should pause to honor those who have given their lives in defense of their country, said Mr. Rohweder. "Reckless driving, with its inevitable deaths and injuries, is neither honoring the departed nor helping keep our Nation strong.

"Heavy traffic on holiday week ends increases the hazards of travel and makes cautious driving doubly necessary. Last year six persons were killed and 252 injured on Minnesota streets and highways from Friday to Monday of week of the Memorial Day week-end.

"Those who contemplate trips over week-end should plan them in advance so they can reach their destinations without excess speed, without taking needless chances, and without becoming so tired that they might fall asleep at the wheel.

There are also some fundamental rules that should be rightly observed. See that your tires, brakes and lights are in good condition. Obey all stop-go signals, stop signs and other warning and regulatory signs. Never pass other vehicles on hills or curves. Never pass anywhere unless you have ample clear space ahead. Never straddle the center line. Don't weave in and out of traffic. Don't mix drinking with your driving - - if you drink, let someone else drive.

"Keep your eyes on the road, your hands on the wheel and your mind on your driving. Use courtesy, caution, and common sense. Take it easy.

Need Well-Balanced Nutrient Supply to Maintain High Yields

MAINTAINING high crop yields year after year depends on getting and keeping a well-balanced supply of nutrients in a soil well conditioned with organic matter, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee in a recent statement.

"No one element is the sole answer to high production over extended periods," says the statement. "It is true that some soil for a time gives startling responses to one element. But the reason for this is that such soil is deficient in that one element, while well stocked with others.

"Take, for instance, a soil lacking in potash. As soon as potash is added, the crop response is tremendous. But continued additions of potash alone will soon pull down the available supply of nitrogen, phosphate and other nutrient elements. When that happens there will be no response from potash until these other elements are added.

"All this emphasizes the fact that an adequate, well-balanced nutrient level is essential to continued high crop production. But for the top in profitable production this high mineral nutrient level must be coupled with practices that give: 1—A plentiful stock of organic matter to give the soil good condition and promote the maximum use of nutrients; 2—Good drainage to save essential moisture and draw off excess water; 3—Adequate soil ventilation to provide crop roots with all the oxygen they need.

"Farmers can condition their soil by the use of lime to provide needed calcium and overcome acidity, the use of good rotations and well-fertilized deep-rooted legumes to increase and maintain organic matter supplies."

Memorial Day Tuesday

We cannot but halt a moment as we cross the threshold of the beautiful month of May, in silent honor of those who gave their all that we might prosper. "Their" day comes in May. A single day out of a year of lenght yet, more hearts, and minds and love will surrender on Decoration Day than on any ether day of the year.

The torn hearts of the mothers who lost their boys on the battlefields of the wars will rest easier as thh Almighty casts his reflection over the world on Decoration Day. The graves of these "boys" will again feel the tears of the loved ones left behind.

No honor is too great for those who laid down their lives in the wars of our nation since its birth No flowers are beautiful enough to grace the graves of our "Soldiers".

It is our prayer, and the prayer of countless others in all parts of the world, that Decoration Day, this year, will serve to tender the resting places of our great, and ease many heavy hearts.

The stores and business places in Holt will be closed Tuesday in observance of Memorial Day.

Insect Control Vital For Top Efficiency From Fertilizer Use

CHICAGO — Uncontrolled insects and diseases can cut the efficiency of the plant food you add to your soil declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee in a statement issued here.

"Adequate nutrition is the No. 1 essential for high yields," says the statement, "but vigilance in fighting disease and insect enemies is vital, too. That is why it is so important to control infestations of the corn borer — destructive insect pest in the Corn Belt."

The committee points out that corn stalks, left on top of the ground are excellent "homes" for corn borers over the winter and spring months.

"Unless these borers are destroyed before they emerge in the spring," it warns, "they will infest early planted corn."

1—Complete plowing under of cornstalks before the moths emerge. This also has the advantage of adding organic matter to the soil.

2—Delay corn planting until after the first flight of moths.

3—High value crops such as sweet corn and hybrid seed may be profitably sprayed if planted early, according to state authorities.

Combine insect and disease control with plenty of plant food and improved soil tilth for top yields and high profits, says the committee. The soil tilth can be built up by deep-rooted legumes in the rotation. These will add organic matter, build soil structure and make the soil a better "sponge" for rainfall.

"These control measures often involve timeliness of plowing and planting" says the statement, "plus a little extra care for clean plowing.

"Their advantage lies in continuity. You may get by without them in one year. But you may have costly losses in another year."

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Senator Pepper Is Defeated; Savings Bond Drive Underway; Loyalty Files Opened to Probe

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

POLITICS:

A New Trend?

Political observers were face to face with the question: is there a new political trend in the wind?

In Florida 36-year-old George Smathers defeated Sen. Claude Pepper, one-time new dealer, by well over 65,000 in the democratic primary. Critics of the Fair Deal, especially the revolting southerners, called it a victory over alarming "creeping socialism," big government, unbalanced budgets and the welfare state.

The winner, however, told Republicans to take no comfort from his victory. He said:

"The people of Florida in this election proved they were unwilling to depart from the well-established and basic principles of the Democratic party. They do not wish to venture off down the side roads of extremism or dangerous experimentation.

"Nor are they interested in turning the clock back to isolationism and the do-nothing attitude of the Republican party."

Meanwhile, the people of Texas elected the first Republican congressman in 24 years when Ben H. Guill, 40-year-old Pampa broker and former schoolteacher, defeated 10 Democrats. It was a sudden-death election to fill the unexpired term of Gene Worley who had resigned to become a federal judge.

Guill said he was going to Washington as one small protest and added: " . . . . If I go up there as one small protest, maybe the powers that be won't think they have the whole country in the bag. Maybe some of those big shots will take a look at this little segment of Texas and take warning."

BOND DRIVE:

Save for Independence

With a gentle tap on the Liberty Bell, Secretary of the Treasury John W. Snyder on May 15 opened the greatest savings bond drive in the peacetime history of the country. The drive continues through July 4.

Fifty-two replicas of the historic relic are on tour of the 48 states, District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico. They will visit over 2,000 communities and will be viewed by millions of people.

The bells were made at the foundry of the Sons of Georges Paccard at Annecy-le-Vieux in France and are said to produce the exact tone of the Liberty Bell before it was cracked in 1835.

The treasury department has one objective—to promote the sale of savings bonds in order to encourage thrift. An attempt will be made to contact every potential buyer of savings bonds in the nation.

At the conclusion of the drive, Snyder said a bell will go to each state and territory for permanent exhibit.

INDOCHINA:

To Get Aid

Secretary of State Acheson announced in Paris that Indochina would get immediate American aid in the form of military equipment in an effort to rid the country of the guerrilla war which has been going on for four years.

He announced the bulk of $75,000,000 already appropriated to combat communism in the Far East will go to the French backed Vietnamese of ex-Emperor Bao Dai and the associated states of Cambodia and Laos to fight Moscow backed Ho Chi Minh.

Many observers felt the move was an important one in the battle against communism in that section of the world. Some believed the Communists may have made too many gains and the aid will be "too little and too late."

Acheson indicated the United States would expect a greater degree of self-government for the three Indochina states under the French.

He added, "The United States considers the situation to be such as to warrant its according economic aid and military equipment to the associated states of Indochina and to France in order to assist peaceful and democratic development."

KING:

Crowns Self

Boston-born Phumiphon Aduldet, who has been on the front pages of American newspapers a great deal recently because of his marriage and the announcement that he had written music for a Broadway production, lifted a nine-tiered crown on his head and became Rama IX, king of Thailand.

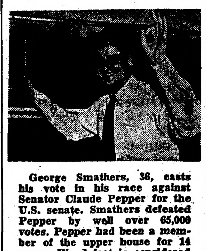
The Winner!



George Smathers, 36, casts his vote in his race against Senator Claude Pepper for the U.S. senate. Smathers defeated Pepper by well over 65,000 votes. Pepper had been a member of the upper house for 14 years. His defeat is considered a blow against President Truman.

SPY HUNT:

Files Available

The Communist spy hunt, called by many a witch hunt and a mud slinging campaign against administration big shots, took a new turn when President Truman agreed to give investigators the complete state department loyalty files on the 81 cases cited by Senator McCarthy.

Although Truman's approval did not cover F.B.I. files, a great amount of F.B.I. material is included in the reports.

It now comes to light that the 81 persons named by McCarthy have been investigated by four other congressional committees.

Senator Tydings, chairman of the subcommittee which has been looking into McCarthy's allegations, said: "No adverse report concerning these employees came to the floor of the house or the floor of the senate and none was sent to the state department after the other investigations.

Some sources are saying public opinion is beginning to blow the lid off the scandals of the Truman administration. But others believe too much time and money are being wasted in an effort to create Communist hysteria for political reasons.

The public, meanwhile, was becoming a little bored and skeptical of explanations from either side. Some logical explanation of what has been going on had better be made and soon, the voter was saying.

TRUMAN:

On Tour

President Truman began his western tour with four speeches on behalf of the Brannan agricultural program, but took time also to preach the gospel against isolationism.

And it was a new Truman, using gentle ridicule against his political enemies instead of the free-swinging, sledgehammer blows he used on a similar trip two years ago. That in itself was enough to make many a politician raise his eyebrows.

The President shoved his needle of ridicule deep when he touched on isolationism. He said:

"Now isolationism would be a cheap policy to follow. It would be easy and cheap to stop spending money on our army and navy and air force and to stop sending supplies to other countries who survived the great war. We can stop these things today.

"Isolationism would be mighty cheap for today and tomorrow and maybe next week. You remember how cheap isolationism was in the 1920's. Taxes were cut, at least for the big fellows, but look at the terrible price we have paid for isolationism in the second world war.

"Today exactly the same issue faces us. There are still some men who keep telling you that we can economize by following an isolationist policy. These men can't see beyond the end of their noses.

"They don't see that isolationism would let the rest of the world be swallowed up by communism. That would certainly bring on a new world war just as it did in 1939. We reneged in 1921, just as Russia today is doing with the help of our own isolationists."

Beauty

Elizabeth Taylor, generally known as one of the most beautiful women in the movie world, was married in what has been publicized as the movie capital's wedding of the year.

Seven hundred guests were invited to the wedding and about 200 to a reception at the Bel-Air country club.

LABOR:

Strike Settled

The 100-day-old Chrysler strike, the second longest and costliest in the history of the automobile industry, has been settled.

The union claimed it won the "10 cents an hour package" in pensions and hospital and medical benefits for which the strike was called.

To put the strike above the mercenary level, UAW president Walter P. Reuther said, "The Chrysler strike was a part of a great human crusade to build a better tomorrow and a better world."

But labor observers said the strike was too long and too costly for anyone to benefit. About 89,000 Chrysler workers in 25 plants and 50,000 in supplier plants had been idle.

Also on the labor front, John L. Lewis announced that the UMW welfare fund would resume payment of benefits next month. Benefits were suspended for almost a year during the UMW's drawn out strikes and restricted work weeks.

Another important move in the labor world was the announcement of William Green of the AFL that his union is willing to meet with the CIO to form a united organization "of all forces and groupings of organized labor."

In a letter to Philip Murray, Green proposed:

1. To co-ordinate work on economic, legislative and political problems.
2. To achieve organic unity.

T-H LAW:

Non-Red Oath

Labor unions, bitter enemies of the Taft-Hartley act since the day it was enacted, found themselves confronted again with one of the most disliked provisions of the law.

The U.S. supreme court upheld the provision that requires union officials to file non-Communist oaths if their unions are to use machinery of the national labor relations board.

Both national and local officers of most unions have filed such affidavits, although a few holdouts remain.

Chief Justice Vinson said in his 31-page opinion, "Those who, so Congress has found, would subvert the public interest cannot escape all regulations because, at the same time, they carry on legitimate political activities. To encourage unions to displace them from positions of great power over the national economy while at the same time leaving free the outlets by which they may pursue legitimate political activities of persuasion and advocacy, does not seem to us to contravene the purposes of the first amendment."

DERBY:

Near Record Bet

A Texas colt and a Texas boy won the greatest sport event on the American scene—the 76th running of the Kentucky derby. The colt was Middleground. The boy was Bill Boland of Corpus Christi.

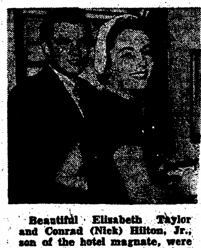
There was another news story in the event, however. Those who keep an eagle eye on the nation's purse were startled that wagering on the race was only $5,016 short of the record.

A total of $1,248,026 was bet. The record handle of $1,253,042 was set in 1947.

For the full nine-race derby day card, the handle was the third highest in history. A total of $3,559,382 was wagered. The 1947 record was $3,636,403. The handle in 1946, second highest in history, was $3,608,208.

If betting is any indication of the economic trend, the prospect for the rest of 1950 would seem excellent. Observers point out that people don't wager when times are hard.

Beauty Married



Beautiful Elizabeth Taylor and Conrad (Nick) Hilton, Jr., son of the hotel magnate, were married in what was publicized as the Hollywood wedding of the year. At the license bureau the clerk told Hilton he didn't look old enough. Hilton went home to get his birth certificate.

GERMANY:

Greater Freedom

Two important announcements concerning Germany, one from Russia and one from the western powers, were in the news.

1. The Russians have agreed, it is reported, to city-wide elections in divided Berlin. But with conditions, of course.

2. The western powers are near agreement to give the Bonn republic virtually complete leeway in its political and economic affairs.

New Chemicals Make Plants Insect-Proof

Federal Entomologists In Experimental Study

New chemicals that make plants toxic to insects for short periods are being tested by scientists of the U.S. department of agriculture. These chemicals kill insects that suck the juices of treated plants. They are known to the entomologists as "systemic poisons" and should not be used by the public until further tests have been made.

Studies now are in progress to determine if these insecticidal chemicals will break down into harmless compounds within a few days or weeks. If they do, a new approach will be available to American agriculture in the control of some of the most difficult insect pests, according to entomologists of the federal bureau of entomology and plant quarrantine.

Beef Herd Decision Problem in Corn Belt

Whether or not to have a beef herd is a long-time decision for the corn belt farmer.

Under average corn belt conditions, a cow can be credited for a 450 pound calf at weaning time. For instance, if you had a 30-cow beef herd on a corn belt farm and a 90 per cent calf crop, you'd have 27 calves worth around $135 each. Or, at 30 cents per pound, a gross income of about $3,600. If four replacement heifers were kept back, there'd be 23 calves worth $3,100 and four cull cows, worth about $1,000, to sell.

There would be a gross income of $4,100 to cover the cost of maintaining a herd of 35 mature animals, including 30 cows, four heifers and one bull, or about $117 per animal per year. If you used the average value of cows and calves over the past 15 years as a yardstick, your gross income would be about half of $4,100.

Clothes From Sacks

With feed manufacturers vieing with each other to create pleasing bag designs, rural America has the opportunity to turn these sacks into many glamorous garments. Here, Jackie Frehand, member of the Wanchese 4-H club on Roanoke Island, N. C., feeds chickens from one of the flowered feed bags, especially designed for re-use by customers.

Summer Eggs Must Always Be Kept Cool, Odor-Free

The poor quality of summer eggs is not the fault of the hen. "Hot-weather" eggs, with their thin whites and flat, weak yolks cause many people to stop buying them.

All handlers of eggs need to keep them cool at all times, and away from odors.

That Stopped 'Em

A FAMOUS AUTHOR was traveling in a train with two very talkative women. Having recognized him from his published portraits, they opened fire upon him in regard to his novels, praising them in a manner which was unendurable to the sensitive author. Presently the train entered a tunnel, and in the darkness the novelist raised the back of his hand to his lips and kissed it soundingly. When light returned he found the two women regarding one another in icy silence. Addressing them with great suavity, he said, "Ah, ladies, the one great regret of my life will be that I shall never know which of you it was that kissed me!"

Nothing to It

At an evening party, a self-made business man was chatting with a pretty young woman.

"You know, I sometimes feel ashamed of my failure to keep abreast of modern science," he said. "Take the electric light, for example. I must confess I haven't the least idea how it works."

"Why, it's very simple, really," she replied. "You just turn a switch and the light comes on. That's all there is to it."

WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR

by HOMER CROY

A prodigal son of northwest Missouri, Homer Croy drove along a country road amid scenes of his youth. As he sees familiar sights, he associates them with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he'd ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their daughters, Ida and Lucy; their son, Harlan, his boyhood pal. He remembers going home from college to attend his mother's funeral. He remembers happy times, too, spent in the Kennedy sitting room. He remembers Ida's many beaus and her romantic escapades from which Newt had to rescue her—and her marriage to Clarence Duncan. Then he remembers Grandpa, who slept on a feather bed, and would not sleep on a mattress.

CHAPTER XIX

Sometimes Newt offered to carry it out and swing it up, but Grandpa wouldn't let him. No sir; he was goin' to do the job himself, just like he had ever since Newt's Ma had died.

One day Grandpa glanced up at the sky; a good day to sun the bed, and yet, in a way, he dreaded it, for it was getting harder and harder to do. "I guess I'll sun my bed," he said as if it wasn't anything at all.

Newt looked at the old gentleman, who appeared to be growing more and more frail. Yet, in some mysterious way, the pioneer had amazing vitality; and unexpected strength, too.

He didn't go straight in, even though he'd made up his mind, but delayed the ordeal as long as he could, the way a person does when he has a hard job to tackle.

Finally he went in and stripped back the covers—there was his precious feather bed, the bed he had spent so much of life on, the bed he'd probably go out on.

"Well," he said. Then sat down, his bony, loose-skinned hands drooping in his lap.

He began edging the feather bed up on the footboard.

How ancient it looked. It was a kind of picture book of the years.

He got the feather bed up on his old humped back and edged the bed through the door. It was heavier than it had ever been before. It hung over him like a giant saddlebag over a mare's back; one huge ball in front, another behind, bumping his legs and trying to get him down.

How far away the line seemed. His knees began to shake. Maybe he wouldn't make it. Yes, by God! he would. He wasn't goin' to be licked by no feather bed.

"Don't you want help, Pa?"

"No, I don't," he said sharply.

Perspiration came out on his leathery forehead and ran down into his eyes. Almost savagely he pawed it out.

Before he really got there, he reached out his hand for the wire; finally seized it. Could rest now.

Now came the struggle to get one of the balls over the line. Up . . . up. He felt dizzy and had to stop.

"You're sure you don't, Pa?"

He waited before answering, panting, his eyes glazed.

"Thankee, I guess I can manage."

Finally, after incredible labor, he got one end of the bed over the wire. He was panting now and so dizzy he had to steady himself by the wire. When he recovered, he began to inch the two balls even.

He set the wire in the V of the prop pole and pushed up; the bed swung high above the ground.

He sat down on his bench and rested a spell. Then came back and proudly surveyed his work. "Made it!" he called.

"I see you did, Pa. You've got amazing strength."

He basked in the compliment. "Not like I used to. Wasn't anybody on the range could do the work I could. One season I broke two hickory pitchfork handles."

Soon he was nodding. After a bit, he felt better. Then got up and went back and again admired what he had accomplished. He glanced at the bed as if to say, "Well, I licked ye!"

Going in, he sat down before the tangle of springs. The springs were held in some semblance of correct position by the lacework of cord. Some of the cord had been worn in two which let the springs tilt out of shape. As patiently as a spider mending its web, he set about putting in new strings.

The sun moved around the bed.

At last, it was time to take it in. If he brought it out, reckon he could take it back.

He sniffed. Smelt sweet.

Mrs. Kennedy's Kin Come a-Calling

He pulled out the prop pole and edged one shoulder under the bed. Finally he had it off the line and on his back, and started across the yard to his room. He had felt dizzy and swayed.

"Do you want me to help, Pa?"

He stopped, all drawn out of shape by the terrible burden. Spots jumped before his eyes.

"I could take just one end, Pa."

When he didn't answer, Newt started toward him.

"Thanks, Newton . . . least, not just yet."

He staggered across the yard, breathing heavily with great gasps. There was trouble negotiating the door, but at last he got through. Turning around so that his back was to the bed, he let the feather bed fall; then sank wearily down on it, panting.

When he felt rested, he pulled the bed into shape. How comfortable it looked. Would get a fine night's sleep.

He went out to Newt in the yard. His old eyes were shining. "Made it!" he called triumphantly.

"I see you did," said Newt. He felt almost as tired as his father.

One day a fine-looking automobile came down the road, but instead of shooting on by it turned in. Many automobiles were now upon the highways; but times had changed. Horses which once had snorted and trembled, now merely pitched their ears and showed the whites of their eyes.

It not only turned in, but gave a honk. If these were strangers in trouble they would hardly honk so imperiously.

Once lazy Nodaway Indians had shuffled along this road; later gypsies had come along it; now tourists were rattling by. It didn't seem much of an improvement.

Four persons got out. Not only got out but started across the croquet ground to the house. Sometimes people got out and gazed at us as if we were Bushmen and indicated we were quaint. But we got even when the time came to charge.

"It must be nice to live in the city," she said.

The man had on a linen duster and had goggles over his eyes. The women had linen dusters, too; also goggles.

As they came straggling across the yard, Grandpa sat looking at them as if he wished this were the old days and he had a gun across his knees.

The Kennedys, by now, were all on the porch, staring as hard as they could.

"Don't you know us?" called the man.

"No, but we'd like to," said Newt. That was taking a chance.

And now all of them, as if by a plan, raised their goggles. "It's Jim and Myra!" said the man.

And so it was. Jim Wallace was a brother of Mrs. Kennedy's and Myra was his wife; the other two were their children.

Newt Tells Why He Likes Farming

"Uncle Jim," as he was called, was a legendary figure. He had gone to the city and got rich. He seemed to travel a great deal and, every now and then, sent a picture post-card from some faroff place. The Brown Palace Hotel, Denver; Shaw's Garden, St. Louis; Rosebud Indian Agency, Portage des Sioux. Sometimes we longed to travel and see the exciting places of the world.

"We're driving through and we thought we'd stop in and see you."

Mrs. Kennedy was delighted to see her successful and citified brother and was full of questions. They were now living in Beatrice, Nebraska, Uncle Jim said. He described Beatrice and its tall buildings and busy streets and its canning plant, and he told about the First Homestead. It made our lives seem drab.

We wanted to ask Uncle Jim what he did, but did not quite dare. All we knew was that it was something tremendously important and that he was rich. He had fine creased trousers and fine white hands and fine square-toed shoes and a gold-filled watch with an American eagle engraved on the back; no Noble Stag for him. Also he had a gold watch chain and a fancy stone watch charm.

"Ida is married now!" said Newt proudly.

"That's nice," said Mrs. Wallace. "Who did she marry?"

"She married a farmer."

"Oh."

"He's goin' to develop into one of the best farmers around," said Newt defensively.

Mrs. Kennedy and Lucy flew about the cooking; always lots to do when company came. Lucy kept running up and down the cellar steps, bringing the finest and best of everything; must make an impression on the city visitors.

At milking time, Uncle Jim sat on the extra stool and told about the places he had been and the important people he had met.

He went around with Newt as Newt fed the hogs and the steers and the horses.

The Kennedys prided themselves on the good table they set, but as glamorous Uncle Jim told about the fine hotels he had been in and the wonderful meals he'd eaten, Newt became more and more humble. "I guess we haven't got the kind of eating you're used to, Jim, but it's substantial and fillin'."

"We've got the best eatin' there is," said Grandpa. "Nobody here lives out of tin cans."

After supper the family went into the sitting room and started the pressure lamp and, as they sat around it, Uncle Jim told about his real estate business and about the easy life he and his family led. Mrs. Kennedy listened intently, absorbed in every word. "I'd like to live in the city. Life must be much easier than on a farm," she said.

There was a moment's silence, for her earnestness and depth of feeling startled the family. Then the moment was passed over.

"I wish you'd tell about the First Homestead," said Grandpa. "I'd relish seeing it."

As the man told about the First Homestead, Grandpa followed eagerly, now and then saying, "Maybe I can make it sometime."

"Excuse me for being personal," said Uncle Jim after a time, "but doesn't life get monotonous on a farm?"

"I just never thought of it that way," said Newt.

"What pleasures do you have?"

Newt moved uneasily. "Well," he said apologetically, "we have our land; nobody can jerk that out from under us. I like to see crops grow. It's a pretty sight to walk out across a new stand of redtop."

"What's so thrilling about that?" asked Uncle Jim.

Confronted with the situation, Newt didn't have a good answer. "Meadow larks fly up. I like to hear a meadow lark go whirring off."

"I suppose it's very nice," said Uncle Jim.

"There ain't anything purtier than a new calf," allowed Newt. "His knees are so knobby and his tail switches so fast."

"That must be interesting."

"Well, yes, 'tis," said Newt. He tried desperately to think of other nice things about farming. "Also I like to chore by lantern light."

As Mrs. Wallace told about the motion-picture theaters and the stores and the big churches and the automobile rides in the evening, a dreamy, faraway expression came into Mrs. Kennedy's eyes. "It must be nice to live in the city," she said.

At breakfast the next morning, the fashionable visitors told more about life in the city. "I have a maid," said Mrs. Wallace.

Newt mustn't show he didn't know what this meant. Still he must be sociable. So he asked politely, "Did you get her from an institution?"

Newt shifted uneasily, thoroughly ashamed of his country jake ways. But he must defend himself. "It seems to me that's goin' a long ways around the barn to say what you mean."

Uncle Jim, It Seems, Has Touching Ways

"I guess we are," said Newt. "Still we get along pretty well," he added defensively.

He began to tell how well. Crops doing good, corn delivered at the boxcar sixty cents now, steady call for beef steers.

After breakfast something came out that hadn't shown itself before. Uncle Jim walked off toward the barn with Newt. But now his manner changed. "Newt, there's something I want to speak about," he said uneasily. "It just so happens I'm short of money."

"Is that so?" said Newt, thinking he meant money to get back to Beatrice.

"I want to pay you interest."

"You don't have to do that, Jim. How much do you stand in need of?"

"Eight hundred dollars."

A small fortune!

"Why," said Newt, "I never had that much at one time in my life, I suppose. Sometimes, when I've sold my corn, maybe I have it, but most of it has to move out to meet obligations. A farmer never has much piled up in the bank at one time."

"Do you expect to sell anything soon?"

Now that he had been turned down, Uncle Jim made light of it, as if the money were a matter of little consequence. "Well, I just thought maybe you'd like to pick up some easy mazooma, so thought I'd give you the first whack at it."

Costly Projects

AS EVIDENCE of the increasing extension of government activities and their ever-increasing annual costs, Sen. John L. McClennan, Democrat, Arkansas, chairman of the senate committee on expenditure of the executive departments of the federal government, presented to members of the senate a detailed list of the various projects the President has asked congress to approve which congress has, or is now, considering.

He gave figures such legislation would call for and the annual expenditures that would be needed. Such expenditures, added to what we now have, would run the cost of government up to approximately $85 billion a year.

It would mean either an unbearable increase in the tax load for the people, or a heavy deficit each year, with no opportunity for paying anything on the government indebtedness. In the end it would mean national bankruptcy and repudiation of our indebtedness.

The folowing projects for which the President has urged approval, would involve new government obligations and an ever-increasing annual cost, totaling for each year more than 18 billion dollars to be added to the present expenditures of the government.

Among the items presented to the members of the senate were.

National commission against discrimination in employment. Annual cost of operation, $5,000,000,000.

Special assistance for rental and cooperative housing. Annual cost, $50,000,000.

Labor extension service. Annual cost, $7,000,000.

Universal military training, Annual cost, $3,000,000,000.

Military housing and public works. Annual cost, $1,400,000.

St. Lawrence waterway. Annual cost, $500,000,000.

Technical assistance for undeveloped areas. (Point 4 Program). Annual cost, $500,000,000.

Farm parity program (Brannan plan). Annual cost, $6,000,000,000.

Incentive payments for development of minerals. Annual cost, $70,000,000.

That staggering total of more than 18 billion dollars would be in addition to our present costs of big government. Add just that much more to our annual deficits, and still they do not represent anything like all of the President's plans for spending. His proposals for the further development of electrical power and the conservation of resources, such as the Missouri valley project, would add other billions to the annual expenditures.

But we cannot rightfully condemn only the President for growth of government or its ever expanding expense. He can add nothing to government functions or expend any money not provided by congressional appropriation. He can only recommend.

It is those we send to Washington, our senators, and representatives from our congressional districts, who provide the money and assess our taxes. We should know how they vote on these projects that represent more government and more expenses.

If they are voting for these ever growing expenditures, then we should use our votes to name new senators and representatives who will give first consideration to the people they represent. To stop the wild spending, the ever-increasing size of government, we need more people in the congress of the type of Senator Byrd of Virginia and Senator McClennan of Arkansas.

Senator McClennan certainly demonstrated that his statement of a government costing 65 billion dollars a year was not merely a wild guess. He delivered the evidence to the members of the senate.

*

It was not until after the turn of the present century that America experienced its first billion-dollar-congress, and what a howl to "turn the spenders out" that congress did create! The Democratic party made that its battle cry.

*

But a few years ago, all new automobiles that came off the assembly lines were a brilliant shiny black. It had to be black to be considered new. To-day the automobile parade contains every color of the spectrum, with the black ones in the minority. The colors add to the picture sequences of the auto parade.

Does iron ore concern Minnesota farmers?

FROM THE TYPEWRITER of F. C. Tibbetts, publisher, Kanabec County Times (Mora), comes a timely iron ore editorial. Suggesting that rich foreign ore deposits could "lure away" Minnesota's mining industry, he asks: "But why should this concern us here? We're dairymen and farmers." He then answers his own question: "The iron ore industry is paying $25 million in state taxes annually and providing employment for thousands who also pay taxes." Without this industry, "that $25 million would have to be made up in higher taxes elsewhere. Part of the burden would fall on citizens here."

Tibbetts

YES, MR. TIBBETTS, Minnesota's iron ore industry DOES concern you. Indeed, it concerns the farmers, workers, businessmen and taxpayers of all our 87 counties. And because every Minnesotan has a stake in iron ore, every Minnesotan should know these few basic facts about it . . .

1. The iron ore industry is taxed at a higher rate than any other major industry in the state.
2. No other state taxes any natural resource as heavily as we tax iron ore.
3. On top of rising taxes, the iron ore industry now also faces rapidly-rising production costs as it turns to concentrating low-grade and taconite ores.
4. These newer ores are vitally needed—along with the shrinking supply of high-grade ore—to assure the state of a permanent mining industry.
5. If these newer ores can compete with ores from other fields, they will lead to still greater employment.

Will Minnesota's low-grade and taconite ores be used in a big way? That depends in part on whether the state sets up a favorable "climate" for its iron ore industry.

Already the present producers of iron ore here have shown they want to get going on low-grade and taconite ore production. They want to put up the necessary millions of dollars in new plants.

But first there's something these producers ask of Minnesota. They ask that their industry be treated like other Minnesota industry. They ask that the constant and repeated threat of increased taxes be removed.

Is that asking too much?

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

HOW ABOUT A BARREL OF HOME MADE CORN FLAKES?

Suppose you bought the ingredients, put in the equipment, and cooked up a barrel of corn flakes just for your own use. Even if they lasted all summer, it would still be pretty expensive breakfast food! Everyone knows by now that it's MASS PRODUCTION that pushes down the cost per unit.

The same is true of electricity. An electric company producing millions of kilowatts in a number of interconnected plants for distribution over a wide area, can make and sell electricity for less than the small, city-owned electric light plant.

Your electric company -- a development of free enterprise through private initiative -- is your best source of low-cost electricity.

Why "Moose" Changed His Mind

Last week, parents were calling Moose Jackson on the phone—and kids were hooting at him in the streets. All because Moose fenced in his field near the depot, where the kids like to play ball.

Moose got sore the way folks acted—refused to budge. Then Doc Sherman, who likes to play centerfield himself sometimes, decided to "use a little psychology."

Over a friendly glass of beer at Andy's Garden Tavern, Doc says, "Sorry this came up, Moose. We were thinking of asking you to umpire—what with your professional experience and all." (Moose used to play a little semi-pro ball.)

That did it! Next day Moose put up a stile over his fence. In return, the kids promised not to cause any damage. From where I sit, when you try to understand the other fellow's point of view—like his personal preference for beer or coffee—and then take into consideration the will of the majority, why, things seem to go better all around.

Teamwork of All Plant Nutrients Needed to Make High Crop Yields

PLANT nutrients have to "play ball" together to make high crop yields possible, the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee points out. Each element has its work to do. Each reinforces the other. None can do the whole crop-feeding job by itself.

"All nutrients must be in balanced supply to give you top yields," the Committee says. "You can't increase crop production by adding only one plant food element when others are short. If your soil has plenty of phosphate and potash, but is short of nitrogen, you won't get good yields unless you supply that nitrogen. And the same is true of phosphate and potash, respectively."

"University of Illinois agronomists demonstrated that it takes the combined teamwork of lime, nitrogen, phosphate and potash to get maximum corn yields. They made their tests on nutrient-deficient soils at the Brownstown field.

"A plot that had no fertilizer yielded only 14.7 bushels of corn per acre. When nitrogen alone was added, the yield was 14.3 bushels. Adding phosphate brought the yield up to 24.8 bushels because the soil got some nitrogen from clovers in the rotation. When potash alone was added, the corn yield was 11.9 bushels per acre. Liming brought the yield up to 31 bushels. When lime, nitrogen, phosphate and potash all were added in balanced supply, the yield rose to 46 bushels per acre."

"Spoiling Children"

Although many parents feel that they will "spoil" their children by responding to the slightest wail, an infant under four months or so needs so much close contact with his mother that his demands for handling or rocking should never be brushed aside. A sick baby, or one who has been hard to nourish properly, needs all the satisfaction and comfort possible.

THE START IS IMPORTANT IN PROFITABLE FEEDING

Get those chicks or poults off to a good start—and when egg-laying season, or the holiday turkey marketing season comes along, you'll be in there for more than your share of profits. The same thing's true of feeding hogs—the start determines the entire life of the animal.

Heavy-yielding barley crop (left) had full feed of nitrogen, phosphate and potash: plot on right was unfertilized.

BUILDING soil fertility is the key to soil conservation, declared Prof. Emil Truog, chairman of the soils department of the University of Wisconsin.

"Keeping our soils high in mineral nutrients works six ways to conserve our soils and protect them from erosion," he declared:

"1—High soil fertility produces a heavier plant growth that protects soil from washing and blowing.

"2—Heavier plant growth uses more water from the land. This allows the soil to absorb more rainfall, thereby reducing soil and water losses caused by runoff.

"3—Fertile soil is in better physical shape to take in water from rainfall. Thus more is stored up for crops and less runs off.

"4—Higher soil fertility increases crop yields on more level fields. This reduces the need for growing clean cultivated row crops on sloping fields, where soil erosion takes a heavy toll.

"5—By improving our soil fertility, we make it possible to grow more crops on fewer acres, thus releasing more land for forestry, wildlife and recreation.

"6—Increased crop yields from soils of higher fertility increases the farmer's income. This, in turn, provides the farmer with money for installing terraces, grass waterways, gully control and other conservation practices.

"With such a program we not only save our soils but give strong aid to the conservation of other resources—forests, wildlife and people," he concluded.

DOAN'S PILLS

WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR

by HOMER CROY

A prodigal son of northwest Missouri, Homer Croy drove along a country road amid the scenes of his youth. As he sees familiar sights, he associates them with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he'd ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their daughters, Ida and Lucy; their son, Harlan, his boyhood pal. He remembers returning from college to attend his mother's funeral. There were happy times, too, he recalls—times like the watermelon party at the Kennedy's, or Ida's wedding day. Then he remembers the time Mrs. Kennedy's brother, Uncle Jim Wallace, and his family from the city came calling in their fine auto, and Uncle Jim tried to borrow $1,800 from Newt.

CHAPTER XX

It came time to go. The visitors put on their linen dusters and fastened their goggles into place. The Kennedy family stood by the car and looked with envy at their city relatives. Uncle Jim waved airily. "You must come and see us sometime."

Uncle Jim engaged the gears. And now—that the very last moment had come—there was a great deal of waving and excited calling of good-bys. Then the fine-looking automobile started down the road.

I come to something that stirred our neighborhood; it stirs me this morning as I sit thinking. For I can still remember our sense of shock.

The idea had been growing in Newt's mind for some time and, although he had told no one, some of the people had their surmises. Anton Delinsky was the first to know; it came about more by chance than anything else. Anton had come to Newt's to borrow a hand planter for his wet spots and was ready to start back, but Newt detained him. He wanted to tell Anton something; yet very much he didn't want to tell him. Finally Newt spoke. "Anton, I guess I've got something to tell you."

"Yah, what iss?"

"I expect it's goin' to come as a bit of surprise." He still delayed the actual saying. "It's this way. I've been thinking things over and doin' some planning an' I'm goin' to leave the farm."

Anton glanced at Newt to see if Newt were funning, for Anton was not quite accustomed to American humor and sometimes was not sure whether a person was pranking or was really serious.

"Yah, dot's goot," he said, taking no chances.

Newt moved uneasily, looking at the ground and not at his friend at all. "I mean it, Anton. I'm goin' to pull off the land."

"For why?"

"Because it's a back killer. It makes you old before your time. It drags your woman folks down. I tell you, Anton, land is a snare and a delusion! The more land the platbook shows, the more trouble you've got."

Anton had been following him, but was still unbelieving.

He smiled, but Newt didn't smile.

"No more hard work for me," continued Newt. "I'm goin' to move to the city, get me a pair of carpet slippers an' sit on the front porch an' fan myself with a palm-leaf fan."

"Yo-ho!" laughed Anton. Anybody could see that was funny.

"What's land anyway? Nothing but trouble and responsibility. Every rain washes it; every wind blows some of it away. Your best cows gets mastitis; your best horse saws a foot on the barbed wire, hog cholera sweeps through your herd. No sir, not for me."

"You will rent your lant?"

"I'm going to sell it, Anton; not even goin' to keep a heifer calf."

"Vhy are you crazy zo sudden?"

Newt's Decision Stuns Grandpa

Newt stumbled a bit, for he didn't want to say right out that he was going chiefly because his wife wished it. "Because I've worked hard all my life and I want to take it easy before they plant me."

By now Anton understood Newt was really going. "Once I vant to go to da city and vork in my cousin's sthore, but you make me stay. You say poof! on da city. Now you say you go. Vhy?"

Newt was becoming more and more embarrassed. "Where are the smart men—on the farms or in the city?"

"On the farms," said Anton stubbornly. "You tell me dot a t'ousand times. Your own boss, you say it yourself. Nobody can poosh you. Dat's what you say. Vot you say now?"

Anton seemed to glare at Newt, so deep and sincere and earnest was Anton's feeling.

For a moment they hated each other.

"You're that same darned, bull-headed stubborn foreigner you used to be. I keep telling you; I've given you my reasons. Stay on the farm and become a broken-down man like everybody else who stays on the farm. I tell you, the land'll lick you!"

"An' da city, vot?"

"It will give me ease and comfort. It will give my family ease and comfort."

"It vill not give you. You ain't for the sidewalks and the silly life." ork yourself to death! Get no [illegible] re out of life."

And he did start, but Newt—now that the moment of parting had come—walked a few rods with him, still talking, as if he realized that someday they would be permanently separated.

"Listen," said Newt, his flash of temper dying down. "If you want me to, I'll come along and help you replant. I can bring a seed bag and work with the hoe. Of course it's not fast but it helps."

Anton was touched. "I do him alone, Newt. T'anks."

Of course it was over the neighborhood in no time at all. Sometimes farmers moved to town and retired; usually they bought on the street where they could see their old neighbors come in. And kept a horse and buggy and would drive out every few days to walk across the old farm. But this was not what Newt meant. He was indeed going to the city.

He meant St. Joseph. It had a population of seventy-five thousand, which was three or four times as many as in our whole county.

The "Colonel" as we called the auctioneer, was half psychologist, half comedian; he stood there, a big gray hat on his head, his thumbs in his vestholes, his cane dangling on his arm, "reading the crowd."

Of course it was not as simple as Newt had made it. Mrs. Kennedy was the one who wanted to go. She was not really of the land; she had never like it as Newt had and as most of our people did. Life was too hard; there was too much work to do, she said.

Uncle Jim's visit and his glamorous description of their easy life had added to Mrs. Kennedy's desire. Of course he had overdone it, but it was still plain they did not work as hard as the Kennedys did, and had more comforts.

Also there had been a series of bad crops and Newt was discouraged. But for that matter, most farmers were discouraged most of the time. Yet no one wanted to pull out. Next year things would be better. One good year would make up for three poor ones.

Newt's decision stunned Grandpa. He sat gazing at Newt through his misty eyes. Finally he said, "Of course you can do as you choose, but I won't be accompanyin' you."

"Just what do you mean, Pa?"

"I mean Cain's."

The rich and successful farmers were from Iowa; one of these bought the old Kennedy farm. It takes some time to close out a farm, for the crops have to be marketed and a thousand details have to be attended to. Everybody hoped Newt would change his mind; but soon we realized it was too late, for he had arranged to buy into an implement store. An "implement store" was one that handled farm machinery, such as plows, pumps, binders, combines and so on. He himself was to travel around selling windmills to farmers.

"Vindmills!" said Anton. "You vill be happy mit vindmills?"

The Auction Proves An Exciting Event

It was our custom, when a family was moving away, to have a series of farewell parties. And so now the entertaining of the Kennedys began. There was much laughing, but also there was sadness. However it was glossed over.

Mrs. Kennedy's spirits were high. Something she had wanted for a long time was coming true. Yet, sometimes, it seemed to us, she was a bit sad. But it was too late now to turn back.

It was the biggest, the most exciting public sale we had ever known. In a way it was a kind of reception for Newt; for everybody wanted to speak to him. Some seemed to hope he would change his mind and come back among them. "It's nice of you to speak that way," he would say.

"But it's for keeps. I couldn't if I wanted to. I'm putting my money into the implement store. That's my corner post and I'm going to anchor to it."

The "Colonel," as we called the auctioneer, was half psychologist, half comedian; he stood there, a big gray hat on his head, his thumbs in his vestholes, his cane dangling on his arm, "reading the crowd." A haltered colt was led up. "All you men who have to go to the house to consult your wife before you can bid, leave now! And all you men who don't know a good chattel when you see it, step back and make way for smart men. What am I offered for this rangy, high-spirited, big-boned colt? Let the moths fly out of your pocketbooks and make me an offer. Who's going to be first?" He teased them along, pleading with them, cajoling them, insulting them, but all the time making them go higher and higher. "Sold!" he cried suddenly. The haltered colt was led away.

Anton was becoming prosperous and we hoped, unconsciously, would bid liberally; if he didn't buy an article himself, he could run it up on the others. But he didn't. He bought very little.

Grandpa walked here and there, leaning on his cane and peering at people "Ain't this Shooley Ford?" Then his old gnarled hand would go out. "I thought so. I don't see like I ust to. Your mother was a fine old pioneer woman. You don't mind if I find a seat do you? My legs ain't what they ust to be." Then he would sink onto a seat with a sigh. Usually he defended his son in everything. But he didn't now, quite.

"I don't stand with Newton. The city will strip him of everything he has like cutworms goin' down on early planting."

"Don't you hate to go?"

There was none of this brooding for Newt. "I'm glad to get this back-breaker off my shoulders!" which was speaking pretty plain before others who had no hope of ever accomplishing this. "A farm wears you out before your time."

"Vindmills!" said Anton and walked away.

Newt did the best he could. The big profits were in the city; a farmer just picked up a city man's down-corn.

His joking manner continued as the sale moved along . . . except now and then he stood silent as some article went up.

Mrs. Kennedy held a kind of court. She was the most important woman there, the very center, the hub of everything. The tanned women looked at her enviously; she was moving to a world above them. But, of course, she would have to give up the land.

Cuckoo Clock Goes On the Auction Block

A quail-and-cuckoo clock went up. It was a Swiss ornamental clock made out of rustic wood, with three iron weights to pull the cords and spin the works. On top of the clock, on an imitation limb, sat a quail with its head turned jauntily to one side. Below it were two doors; when the hour struck, the doors flew open and a cuckoo popped out and called something that vaguely sounded like "Cuckoo!" At one o'clock it said "Cuckoo!" At two o'clock it said "Cuckoo! Cuckoo!" At twelve it almost sang a song. How fascinating it had seemed when they had sent to the Larkin Soap Company, in Buffalo, for it. But fashions in clocks were changing; everybody now wanted a cathedral-gong clock, or an ornamental imitation marble clock with two classic Greek figures holding harps. But how many happy hours Mrs. Kennedy had heard the clock tick-tock away; how many times the cockoo had come out and spoken to her.

The auctioneer held it up. "How much do I hear?"

No one offered.

"It's a fine clock, in good condition, very stylish. Who's going to be first?"

"Two bits," said a sheepish voice in the rear.

The auctioneer shot him a withering glance. Then his helper held up the big-bowled, blue-tinted lamp Mrs. Kennedy had spent so many hours of her life beside.

"Now what'm I bid for the combination?"

Mrs. Kennedy watched them go . . . these symbols of her broken-up home. But—she cheered herself—she would have much better and finer things in her new life.

As noon approached, the people began drifting toward the lunch wagon; the sides had been lowered to make counters; inside the wagon was a stove and on it were pots and pans. Delicious, appetizing odors hung on the air. Lunchtime was always a merry time; people joked, told stories and exchanged news. Newt went among them urging them to eat. "Come on now; this is one day of the year you get it free. First come, first served." And the people did pitch in, for nothing tastes better than fried rabbit in March at a public sale. Finally one of the men noticed that Newt himself was not eating.

"Sure I am!" said Newt, taking a paper plate heaped with food and beginning to eat. "The trouble with you is that you were so busy eating yourself, you didn't see what other people were doing."

RUSSIA:

Wants Hot War

Most Americans, who cannot make themselves believe Russia is ready or wants a war, were being told otherwise by European diplomats.

In Europe the belief is growing that Russia now accepts a shooting war as the alternative to the cold war in winning world supremacy. Until recently experts believed European security could be viewed in terms of political activity and economic pressure.

A recent poll of European diplomats, however, reveals that they now believe the political bureau of the Russian Communist party soon will be willing to fight a hot war in pursuit of its aims.

One reliable source declares the Russians would be "ready" to fight in 1952. By then the Soviet Union will have a stockpile of atomic bombs and numerical superiority in ground and air forces.

The Russians are estimated to have 20,000 first-line planes in operation at the present time. That would indicate Russia may be able to fight a "hot war" on a moment's notice. It is generally accepted by observers that the atomic bomb is already in production behind the iron curtain.

BARUCH:

Stop Inflation

Since the war all classes of Americans—farmers, laborers, businessmen, office workers—have worried about inflation.

For all of them the dollar buys less than before the war. Of late, however, there has been little said or done about the inflation spiral.

Now Bernard M. Baruch, adviser to Presidents for 40 years, has taken another swing at inflation.

"Inflation is the cold war we Americans are waging against ourselves," the statesman warns.

"Inflation affects the integrity of all our defenses, both moral and military, national and international," he added. "This continuing spiral doesn't necessarily mean trouble ahead if we don't put a stop to it. Somewhere along the line, the balloon always bursts."

The national situation as he sees it finds the country balancing precariously between employment and the maintenance of a high standard of living, and unemployment and inflation.

We must work out a program to curb inflation that will be fair to everyone, he said. No one will like it, but we must do it and soon.

STATE DEPARTMENT:

McCarthy Lied

The state department had waded into the McCarthy spy hunt of the department's personnel by issuing a white paper that hints that the senator deliberately lied.

Assistant Secretary Edward W. Barrett sent 500 newspaper editors an eight-page analysis of McCarthy's speech which charged the department was overrun by Communists.

Barrett's reply contained a point-by-point denial. While it did not assert is so many words that McCarthy was lying, the document repeatedly sought to show that he uttered "misstatements" and "inaccuracies."

Meanwhile, the loyalty files, recently turned over to the senate foreign-relations subcommittee investigating communism in government posts, were being studied.

Senator Tydings, chairman of the committee, said he would make a full report to the people on the contents of the files.

Eighty-one cases were being investigated.

Parting?

The movie fans of the nation were startled with the rumors of "strained relations" between Bing Crosby and his wife, Dixie Lee. This 1939 photograph shows the Crosbys with their four sons. Bing is in Europe and will not return until mid-June.

GAMBLING:

13 Billion Take

The American Academy of Political and Social Science reports there are 50 million suckers in the United States who lose 13 billion dollars a year to gamblers.

The experts said Americans bet eight billion dollars a year with horse-race bookies. Pari-mutuel machines alone account for $1,600,000,000 a year and produce more than 100,000,000 annually in tax revenue.

BROADWAY AND MAIN STREET

Rose Allows as How He Saw Some Flying Saucers; Claims He Wasn't in His Cups at the Time, Either

By BILLY ROSE

At the risk of being laughed out of court and countenance, I'd like to report that I've seen flying saucers.

It happened on a clear and moon-minus night two summers ago in Newton, Conn., on the lawn of the home belonging to Paul Osborne, the playwright. Among my fellow oglers were Paul and his wife, Director Josh Logan and his missus, and Author John Hersey and his. What's more, none of us was in his cups the night we watched the flying saucery.

The show began about 10 p.m. while we were sitting outdoors, enjoying and shooting the breeze, and the first thing we noticed were several searchlights some miles away poking their yellow fingers into the sky. A few minutes later, three bits of celestial chinaware skittered into view, and from then until midnight they skipped and scampered above our bewildered heads.

Billy Rose

As nearly as I could judge, these whatzies were at least 200 feet in diameter and were flying at an altitude of from 3,000 to 5,000 feet. Their edges gave off a ghostly glow, very much like blue neon tubing seen through a heavy fog.

* * *

WHEN THE SEARCHLIGHTS finally cut off and the discs got lost in the stars, we put what was left of our heads together and decided that what we had witnessed must have been some kind of hush-hush military exercise. We also decided that, if we didn't want a butterfly net slipped over our heads, it would be smart to keep our lips zipped about the whole thing.

How come, then, that with my bare face hanging out in print, I'm spilling the story now? Well, until recently the talk about the persnicpety pancakes had been more loose than lucid—according to some writers, they were manned by Martins two inches tall; according to others, by Russians two droshkies wide.

Recently, however, documentation has begun to replace delirium, and it's becoming evident that the overgrown manhole covers are not only real, but, despite all denials, one of the top-secret weapons of our own navy and air force.

The most convincing testimony was offered April 3rd by Henry J. Taylor on a General Motors broadcast over the ABC network. Taylor, after treking all around the country and talking to people who had seen, touched and even flown these credulity-cracking craft, made the following flat and unfrivolous statements about them:

One type of saucer is the "true" disc, which ranges anywhere from 20 inches to 200 feet in diameter, is unmanned and generally guided by some form of remote control. The other is a jet-driven platter which carries a crew and is capable of such supersonic speeds that in flight it looks like a hundred-foot flaming cigar.

* * *

FURTHERMORE, according to Henry J., a "true" disc was actually photographed near Wildwood, N. J.; another was found in the vicinity of Galveston, Texas, and stenciled on its surface was the following:

MILITARY CRAFT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

ANYONE DAMAGING OR REVEALING DESCRIPTION OR WHEREABOUTS OF THIS MISSILE IS SUBJECT TO PROSECUTION BY THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT. CALL COLLECT AT ONCE. (Then a long distance telephone number, and the address of a U.S. Air Base, and finally the words on the "saucer" in big, black letters: NON-EXPLOSIVE.)

Well, I don't know what the saucers are for, but on the basis of this and other reports—plus the evidence of my own bug-eyes — I'm convinced they exist and, praise the Lord and pass the ammunition, are ours. Moscow papers please copy.

I wrote a column recently about the bureaucratic blabbermouths in our nation's capital who, at the drop of a daiquiri, blurt out top military secrets to anyone who will listen. Well, I'm plenty happy to learn that—at least as regards one vital weapon—there are some folks in Washington who not only know their beans but can keep from spilling them.

STAGE SCREEN RADIO

CLAUDETTE COLBERT won a popularity poll that really means a lot—the one conducted by the Woman's Home Companion; her latest picture is "Three Came Home." June Allyson was second; her "The Stratton Story" was voted last year's best picture. In third place, Loretta Young; fourth, Olivia de Havilland. Bing Crosby headed the men's list for the fifth time in succession; then came Spencer Tracy; his "Adam's Rib" was the second best picture. Third, Cary Grant; fourth, Clark Gable. Jeanne Crain got a special award for her "Pinky" performance. Last year Ingrid Bergman, Irene Dunne and Bette Davis were the three leaders among the women.

M-G-M is going to resurrect "The Merry Widow" again, this time in Technicolor, starring Lana Turner and Richardo Montalban. They made it first in 1925, with John Gilbert and May Murray; then in 1935, with Maurice Chevalier and Jeanette MacDonald.

Louis Calhern must be very happy. Ever since he starred so successfully on the stage in "The Magnificent Yankee," as Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, he has wanted to do it in pictures. Now it's all arranged, at Metro.

Wally Butterworth thought he had an easy name to remember, but some of the bushels of letters coming in to his "Voices that Live" treasure hunt have made him wonder. Mail has come addressed to "Walla Walla," "Valley Water Works," "Wally Boderwald" and "Walter Warwurst," among others, And he's acquired such first names as "Rolly," "Art," "Perry" and "Olive."

Why, oh why doesn't some record company persuade Pia Tassinari and Ferrucio Taglivini to record "Lontano, lontano"? It has brought the greatest listener response in the history of the Telephone Hour whenever they sing it.

Ed "Duffy's Tavern" Gardner's first film production will be "The Man with My Face." The story's locale was a western frontier town. But Ed changed it to Puerto Rico, where he now lives.

The police of Miami, Fla., were bewildered; instead of getting official orders on their radio-phone system they got instruction like "Rush lunches to 'The Breaking Point' unit at Newport Harbor, Calif. John Garfield and Patricia Neal are getting mighty hungry." They appealed to the Federal Communications Commission—and Warner Bros. had their frequency changed.

Stanley Kramer wisely chose Mala Powers to play "Roxanne" in "Cyrano de Bergarac." Discovered by Ida Lupino, her first picture was "Outrage"; Howard Hughes subsequently took over her contract. Jose Ferrer predicts that "In another ten years she will have so many Oscars in her pocket she'll be able to use them for book ends." He took part in her tests.

THE FICTION CORNER

ON THE PAYROLL

By Richard H. Wilkinson

3-Minute Fiction

He himself was a copy man, and if she were after the same job that he wanted it would complicate things. It would cut his chances of success in half, and it would be rather embarrassing because—well, because he thought she was an awfully pretty girl and he liked the way she held her chin high and tried to appear brave.

On Monday of the second week, the redheaded girl dropped her handbag. It's contents spilled all over the place. Jud helped pick them up—lipstick, a bunch of keys, a pawn ticket! Jud's lips tightened when he saw that. Just as he thought—she's had to pawn something in order to live.

Of course the handbag episode gave him the liberty of talking with her. Without half trying, he got her story. It was just as he figured. A sad tale of deprivation and lost hope. If only she could see Mr. Jones. She knew he needed a stenographer and she was really awfully good.

A determined light came into Jud's eyes.

Ignoring the protestations of the switchboard girl, he burst through the railed-in space, crossed it in two bounds and threw open the door to Mr. Jones' office.

Mr. Jones was sitting at his desk, smoking a cigar. He looked up with a startled expression when Jud entered. He had heavy jowls and a shock of grey hair and belligerent, bushy eyebrows.

The cigar fell from his mouth. He stood up. Before Jud could utter a word, he barked: "Your name Jud Essex?"

"Of course, I'm serious. I made a bet with Dad that I'd marry you."

"Yes, sir," said Jud, taken aback.

"I'll be durned!" exclaimed Mr. Jones. "Did she tell you who she was?"

"Did who tell me who who was?" Jud asked, beginning to think he was mistaken for some one else.

"My daughter! That redheaded girl in the outer office?"

It was Jud's turn to drop a cigar, if he'd had one. "Your daughter? That——the girl who wants a job as a stenographer?"

Mr. Jones came round his desk. He was short, but rotund. He glared up at Jud. "You're hired," he said. "I lost a bet, so you're hired. But you'd better make good, or you're fired. Get that!"

Shut up! Do you want the job or don't you?"

Mr. Jones stalked out of the office. A man came in another door and told Jud to follow him. "Kate always wins," the man said. "Here's your desk. Kate wants you to go to lunch with her this noon."

JUD SAT DOWN, speechless. "Do you mean—am I one of several who have been hired in this fashion?"

Jud passed a hand through his hair. The man left. Jud sat down at his desk. He tried to straighten things out in his mind, and was beginning to get places, when Kate entered.

At lunch Kate said: "Would you like to marry me?"

"Sure," said Jud, grinning weakly.

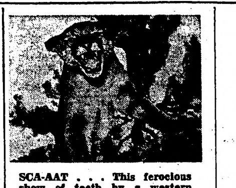
"All right then. Right after work. I'll be waiting."

He wondered what was next. He found out. She took him to a minster's. She produced a license. Jud tried to grin. He gulped and stared at her.

"Good lord! You're not serious about this?"

Jud suddenly no longer had the feeling that he liked all this. "Now listen," he said. "I can't marry you. In the first place I don't love you. In the second I think you and your old man are crazy. And in the next place, I'm already married and have three kids!"

Mr. Jones called Jud on the phone the next morning. "Mister, you're still working for me if you want the job. I won a bet from Kate, and it's cured her of her screwy notions. Come on down. Your salary's doubled."



SCA-AAT . . . This ferocious show of teeth by a western mountain lion didn't scare off the photographer who wanted to get this picture. And brother, how he must have wanted to get it.

This Is Your Paper

Censorship Is Dangerous

By William R. Nelson

CENSORSHIP is an action Americans resist so aggressively it has not even been imposed by law in time of war. Whenever some misguided attempt is made, whether against press, movies or radio, it is quickly squelched by aroused public opinion. Yet there are other attempts which fail only because of the knowledge, tact or courage of a home town newspaper editor.

Every newspaper has frequently to resist minor efforts at censorship. They are resisted because editors know that a minor success today can become a major one tomorrow.

Danger Is Inherent

Strangely enough, very few who participate in these minor instances fully realize what they are doing. Having the best of intentions, they fail to see the danger inherent in their actions.

Whenever a "request" is made that a newspaper omit facts concerning a public matter, censorship is being attempted.

Even a spat between neighbors becomes a matter in which the public is entitled to the facts, if the services of police or a court are required. Police and courts belong to the public which authorizes and pays for them, and how their services are employed is of concern to the public.

There are instances, of course, where private rights outweigh those of the public, and the editor is justified in suppressing such news. There are other instances, also, where good taste may dictate that an item be omitted. But, whatever the fine points involved, it is the editor's judgement which should prevail.

Honesty or Coercion?

Newspaper editors do not resent honestly intended requests to overlook incidents where there is doubt that the public interest outweighs the private rights. They do resent them if accompanied by coercion in whatever form.

The editor is expert in such matters as public right to news. He is the best judge of whether or not public interests outweigh those of individuals or organizations involved. His judgement should be accepted without resentment. Censorship is a dangerous force, too dangerous to set in motion, no matter how innocently it may be employed.

That Did It

The family was seated at the table with a guest, who was a business acquaintance of Dad's, all ready to enjoy the meal, when the five-year-old son blurted out: "Why, mother, this is roast beef!"

"Yes," answered the mother, "what of it?"

"Well, Pop said this morning that he was going to bring a big fish home for dinner tonight."

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Donuts and Maple Syrup

Not enough time for pancakes? Here's a great breakfast dish to take their place. For each serving, slice a donut crosswise and toast the sliced side. Heat maple syrup, and pour it over the toasted donuts while they are still hot. It's tops with bacon or sausages, too.

Versatile Server

A round server is very practical for serving all kinds of foods which are hard to balance on a regular tablespoon, such as fish cakes, fried eggs and waffles.

Rip Finger Seam

It isn't necessary to cut off the ring finger of the glove in order to place the ring on the finger. Simply rip the seam on one side of that finger.

Sugar to Flowers

Let your sugar bowl serve as a cigaret container on some occasions. Or fill it with flowers at other times.

Supper Dish

A supper dish is attractive as a centerpiece holding fruits. It is also good for salad.

Cheesecloth Strains Fat

When you deep fat fry foods allow the hot fat to cool before straining and storing it. This way it will be easier and safer to handle. A good way to strain the fat is to put a few folds of cheesecloth in a sieve and pour the fat through it into a container that can be covered tightly.

Paper Towels Useful

A roll of paper towels in your kitchen will have a great many uses. Use a toweling to drain bacon on, use it to wipe salad greens dry and put it under cake and cookie racks to save counter and table tops from crumbs.

How to keep a taxpayer healthy

DOWN IN LANESBORO, Editor A. W. Morey of the Leader recently penned a frank editorial on iron ore taxes. "We in southeastern Minnesota," he wrote, "have been uninterested, in fact jealous, of the northern section over their income from iron ore, and have paid little attention to the problems of this gigantic industry. Perhaps it behooves us now to look into them. We certainly benefit from the industry, as they pay $27 million in state and local taxes. We don't want to lose it from excessive greed."

Morey

NO INDEED, MR. MOREY. On the contrary, let's see if this big Minnesota taxpayer can't be made healthier than ever before . . . with greater benefits to every section of the state.

True, Minnesota's deposits of high-grade ore—the easiest kind to mine—aren't what they used to be. They've been shoveled up—especially during the war years—at record rates.

But Minnesotans can thank their stars when they look at the low-grade and taconite ore reserves. These add up to billions upon billions of tons. Truly, they are the great hope for the future.

Put to work, these newer ores can lead to . . . .

- Increased employment (because producing them takes twice as much manpower);
- Continuing tax revenue (because the supply is so great);
- Better business for Minnesota merchants and farmers (because larger ore payrolls mean larger markets for everything workers buy).

Yes, a healthier iron ore industry can mean much to ALL MINNESOTA.

What does this mean? It means treating this industry like other Minnesota industries. It means showing the iron ore producers that their multi-million-dollar investments in new ore plants won't be short-changed by unfair ore tax policies.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

Good Seed, Soil Care And Plant Food Give Record Wheat Yield

THE teamwork of good farming practices, plenty of fertilizer and improved seed varieties helped Claude W. Thorp produce 74.5 bushels of wheat per acre on his farm near Clinton, Ill., last summer. This was one of the highest wheat yields ever reported.

Thorp's record crop came from a 25.2 acre field. Altogether this field produced 1,879 bushels of wheat. He seeded Pawnee wheat, a hard red winter variety developed by the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station. At harvest the wheat was weighed on state-inspected scales and the field carefully remeasured.

At seeding time the autumn before the wheat was drilled at the rate of a bushel and a half an acre, following removal of a soybean crop.

Thorp "poured it on" so far as fertilizer is concerned. He broadcast 500 pounds per acre of 8-8-8 fertilizer before drilling the wheat. Previously the same year, 400 pounds of 3-12-12 was added ahead of the soybean crop. He uses this heavy fertilizer program to build up the soil under a 4-year rotation of clover, corn, soybeans and wheat.

That the "Golden Rule" is one to live by was demonstrated to Mrs. Milton Conklin. The same day it was returned to her by her good neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Wegge who, luckily for her, had found the purse.

Pioneer of Holt Twsp. Passes

The community was saddened Sunday to hear of the death of Mrs. Louis Wegge, pioneer of this community. She was one of the early pioneers, much respected for her staunch support of worthwhile projects. She was a member of the Nazareth Ladies Aid and her absence at the meetings was keenly felt after she moved to Thief River Falls.

Emilie Wegge was born in Germany on March 26, 1870. She came to the United States with her parents when she was 11 years of age. She lived at Paynesville, Minn. until 1886 when she came with her parents to Holt. She was united in marriage to Louis Wegge in October, 1889. They homesteaded in Holt township where they farmed until 1935 when Mr. Wegge passed away. Mrs. Wegge made her home in the village of Holt from 1935 to 1944 when she moved to Thief River Falls.

Mrs. Wegge had been in failing health for several months and passed away at Mercy hospital in Thief River Falls on Sunday morning, June 4. At the time of her death she was 80 years, 2 months and 8 days.

She is survived by four daughters, Selma, Mrs. O. M. Mickelson of York, N. D.; Mrs Melinda Carlson of Crookston; Lucy, Mrs H. L. Paskewitz of Seattle, Wn.; Irene, Mrs. Tyler Nelson of Moorhead. Two sons, Edgar of Holt and Dennes of Thief River Falls. Also 13 grandchildren and 13 greatgrandchildren. One brother and four sisters. Her husband, two sons and a daughter preceeded her in death.

Funeral services were held Wednesday from the Nazareth Lutheran church Wednesday with Rev. V. G. Sorenson officiating. Interment was made in the Holt cemetery.

Collins Funeral Home had charge of arrangements.

Rev. Sorenson spent a few days last week at Lake of the Woods Bible camp where he assisted in getting the camp ready for summer camps.

Mrs. Milton Conklin was given a parcel shower Sunday afternoon at her home.

—WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS—

Nation Displays Might on First Armed Forces Day; Atlantic Pact Nations Announce Defense Plans

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

ARMED FORCES:

A Workable Team

Any doubts that observers might have entertained about the success of armed forces unification in the United States was dispelled with the observance of the first national Armed Forces Day.

For the observance, America's fighting forces across the world paraded in the mightiest show of power since World War II. The biggest show of all went on in Germany where more than 85,000 Yanks demonstrated their readiness.

The day's message to the world was plain: The United States is awake to the menace of Communist aggression and is readying its defenses.

President Truman took the occasion to tell the public that if congress had passed his universal military training program five years ago "there would have been no cold war."

He also invited all Americans "to take stock of the state of our readiness to defend ourselves against aggression."

And, in general, Americans were pleased and impressed with what they saw on parade. Although the forces were less in number, they seemed well trained, power-packed units that would form the backbone of new armies should the situation arise.

Army, navy and air force put on a united front that was pleasing to observers who remember recent unification squabbles between the services.

BOSTON:

Taste of Tradition

Climaxing its jubilee celebration, staid old Boston let down its hair by serving dinner to 10,000 on the Common and holding a barn dance at the Garden.

Believed to be the largest meal ever served to a seated group, the guests got a taste of tradition by consuming five tons of baked beans, three tons of potato salad, and 3,500 pounds of ham.

Earlier events of the jubilee were designed to call attention to the cultural, business, industrial, and recreational advantages of Boston and New England.

Serving the "baked-bean supper" and all the trimmings took less than an hour, some kind of a record. The trimmings included 2,000 loaves of brown bread, 12,000 individual apple pies, 12,000 servings of cheese, and 12,000 Parker house rolls.

One thousand volunteer waitresses, supervised by 40 home economists and dieticians, served the food.

UNEMPLOYMENT:

Worker's Output Up

According to the federal reserve board the individual worker's increased output has been one of the big factors in the unemployment picture since last summer.

The board analysis of "labor market developments" point to two influences at work on the part of business management:

1. "Large profits and strong financial position in recent years have encouraged business to spend record amounts for new machinery and equipment of highly efficient design.

2. "Intensified competitive pressure on management to reduce costs partly by curtailing employment and by utilizing those employed more efficiently than earlier in the postwar period."

In addition the board reports there is an increased "tendency for married women to work outside the home," and a similar trend among teen-agers.

FARM INCOME:

Likely to Dip

The agriculture department predicts that the cash income of the nation's farmers will be well under 1949 totals.

The department explained:

"Prices farmers receive for their products have generally been below those of a year ago, while their costs have declined only slightly. This situation is expected to continue for the rest of the year."

Cash receipts from marketings in 1949 totaled 27.5 billion dollars. Forecasters expect the 1950 total to be approximately 25 billion dollars.

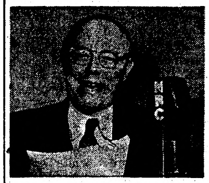
NATIONALISTS:

Ready for Last Stand

Observers believe the long expected last stand of Chinese Nationalists is now underway. They base their opinion on the fact the Nationalists have withdrawn from all except one of their blockading bases along the China coast.

Apart from Formosa and the neighboring Pescadores islands, the only territory remaining to the Nationalists appears to be Quemoy island, off Amoy.

Assails Truman



Sen. Robert Taft is shown above speaking over a nation-wide radio network. He charged in his speech that the administration has shaken the confidence of the people and seeks to elect a "subservient" congress to vote into law policies that would wreck the country.

DEFENSE:

West United

At one point in their policy making in recent years, the Rusians reasoned, and not without basis, that the western powers would never really be united. That reasoning, however, has received a terrific jolt.

The 12 western nations, members of the Atlantic pact, have agreed to pool their economic and military might into one vast armed force, centrally directed to resist Soviet aggression.

The plan, in reality a unification move, is American inspired. It will "create a balanced collective force," which means each of the 12 nations will contribute specific units to the central western armed force and not try to maintain expensive over-all military establishments, each self-contained in all arms.

The move was seen by military men as the one means of giving the west a balanced defense force, working in harmony, and with maximum efficiency.

The United States is expected to bear the greatest part of the cost, although each nation will share in proportion to its resources. The U.S. share is expected to cost more than a billion dollars this year.

That the West is deadly serious and intends to have the plan in operation as soon as possible was evident by the creation of an over-all council of deputy foreign ministers, meeting all year round, to put the plan into force. The council will have a permanent powerful chairman who, it is understood, will be an American.

Some sources predicted the U.S. may require a larger air force and navy under the plan, since this country will be entirely responsible for atomic and other strategic bombing in case of enemy aggression.

DEMOCRATS:

Harmony Disturbed

Surface harmony prevailing among Democrats at the Jefferson jubilee celebration in Chicago was shattered by the controversial civil rights issue, which split the party in 1948.

Most southerners who attend the Chicago meeting chose to ignore the civil rights panel. Jonathan Daniels, North Carolina national committeeman and former White house aide under both Presidents Roosevelt and Truman, did not so choose.

He sat through the meeting, listening to 16 speakers demand enactment of the Truman program, and then insisted upon speaking at the conclusion.

He told them flatly he could not go along with them in favor of a compulsory fair employment practice act, and added: "you cannot have a prohibition law against discrimination in the south."

He asserted the propaganda for the creation of a fair employment practice commission "gives a weapon to our enemies, the Dixiecrats" and makes it possible for them "to hide behind the civil rights issue while they fight every progressive measure."

Moscow Tool

The independent United Electrical Workers union has been denounced again as "Communist dominated."

Maurice J. Tobin, secretary of labor, and Phillip Murray, president of the CIO, made the charges in speeches at a rally of General Electric workers. The UE was expelled from the CIO last year on charges of having left-wing tendencies.

POLITICS:

Are Both Parties Split?

Observers are wondering if the Republican and Democratic parties both are going into the November election with split political fronts.

The Republican trend came to light in the Oregon senatorial primary which was won by independent voting Sen. Wayne Morse. His campaign is not likely to resemble any other Republican drives this fall.

In many quarters the Duff and Morse victories were seen as signs that many Republican voters think the party needs to offer more than mere opposition to President Truman's Fair Deal.

On the Democratic front, a few more cracks have been added to the split caused by the civil-rights conflict started in 1948.

Southerners are still battling the program, and recently, have generally opposed Truman's plans for more government spending. The Brannan plan has added fuel to the fire of discontent among some of the President's best western friends.

With these points in mind, the September and October political speeches of both parties may prove the most interesting in years.

Meanwhile, a high-ranking Republican took another swing at the President, charging that he seeks a "rubber-stamp" congress elected in November.

Said GOP national chairman Guy Gabrielson: "The 1950 issues now are clear. President Truman has asked the voters to give him a rubber-stamp congress that will approve his program of socialism."

WINNIPEG:

Wet but Undefeated

Flood battered Winnipeg slowly returns to normal. With nearly a fifth of the city at one time under water, the citizens raised a banner proclaiming they were "wet but undefeated" on the court house and waited for the Red river to show its first drop.

Before it came flood waters had reached a record high for the century. Some 100,000 of Winnipeg's 350,000 population were forced to evacuate and many of southern Manitoba's towns were deserted.

When the river showed its first drop, flood waters were about two feet below the absolute peak at which engineers figured nearly all of Winnipeg would be waterlogged and the whole population would have to be evacuated.

Even with the river back in its banks, however, observers said it would be near the last of June before the city would be back to normal.

MRS. ROOSEVELT:

Comforted Distressed

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt was awarded the seventh annual Williamsburg Settlement gold-medal award for typifying the American way of life and aiding the underprivileged.

At the presentation dinner, former congresswoman Clare Boothe Luce called her long time political foe the "best-loved woman in the world" and said that no woman ever had "so comforted the distressed—or distressed the comfortable."

"When her justly notable tolerance and patience with the Communists finally gave out, that day tolerance of communism in America ended officially. It is safe to say that her resistance to Soviet communism is a more potent factor in winning the cold war than an extra billion dollars of Marshall plan aid," she added.

Something New

With all the investigations that have been under way in Washington, Rep. Usher L. Burdick of North Dakota has come up with a new one. He asked the house rules committee to approve a resolution to investigate—of all things—congress. The committee postponed action on the resolution indefinitely.

EXPLOSION:

Second in Generation

The stunned and battered community of South Amboy, N.J., 30 miles south of New York City, tied up its wounds and, for the second time in a generation, went about the business of rebuilding.

On May 19 four explosive-laden barges blew up with such force debris was splattered over a 10-12 block area. Twenty-six persons were dead or missing and near 400 were injured.

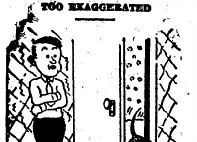
TOO EXAGGERATED



"What is it about a dachshund that you don't care for?"

"They make such a draft when they come into a room. They always keep the door open so long."

Stickler for Truth

It was enough to startle the little old lady out of her wits. There was the fishmonger tossing trout clear across his shop to a man in fisherman's outfit.

The fisherman caught about six of them and then said, "All right, Joe. Now I can truthfully tell my family that I caught six fish today."

Slightly Soiled

For the third time she said to her little son, "Run quickly and wash your hands for dinner."

He looked over his hands and then returned the verdict:

That Proved It

Do you pretend to have as good a judgment as I have?" exclaimed an enraged wife to her husband.

"Well, no," he replied slowly, "our choice of partners for life shows that my judgment is not to be compared with yours."

WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR

by HOMER CROY

A prodigal son of northwest Missouri, Homer Croy drove along a country road amid scenes of his youth. As he sees familiar sights, he associates them with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he'd ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their daughters, Ida and Lucy; their son, Harlan, his boyhood pal. He remembered coming home from college for his mother's funeral. There were happy times, too, he recalls—times like the watermelon party at the Kennedy's and Ida's happy wedding day. Then he remembers when Newt made his great decision to sell his farm and invest in an implement store in St. Joe. Then came the day of the public auction on the Kennedy place.

CHAPTER XXI

Ida was everywhere; she unrolled the carpets for the people to see; she held up the frames to show the pictures. Newt glanced at her with satisfaction. She was settling down; wasn't wild like she used to be. Clarence was steady. The two would be a fine credit to the community. Make a good young farm couple.

One of the problems of moving had been Grandpa's feather bed. He wanted to take it with him, but the family had tried to talk him out of it. A feather bed would be out of place in the city. Logic was on their side; sometimes the old gentleman was almost convinced. But still he loved his feather bed.

His possessions had been set outside for the crowd to see; in making the changes the bed had been brought out and was hanging on a clothesline post. The bed was not part of the sale.

Old Grandpa was following the crowd, a little behind now, for he was growing tired. Suddenly, as he came up, he saw the auctioneer pause beside his feather bed. Grandpa did not realize at the moment what he meant. But he was not long in finding out for the brass-lunged auctioneer gave it a whack with his cane. "There you are, gentlemen, an old-fashioned feather bed, the finest sleeping in the world! What am I bid?"

Grandpa knew he could stop the sale, but also he knew he should let it be sold. Newt and the family would be pleased. But it was his bed, a very part of him—no! he could not let it be sold. He began pushing his way through the crowd, calling out over and over. "'Taint fer sale. 'Taint fer sale." But no one heard him. And now the auctioneer was shouting. "One dol-lar . . . one dollar . . . do I hear a dollar and a quarter?" By now Grandpa was through the crowd and he laid his old hand on the precious bed and glared defiantly at the auctioneer. "I tell ye it ain't for sale!"

The auctioneer smiled. "Of course we won't sell it, Grandpa." The crowd smiled, too as if to say, "Queer old man." The crowd passed on to other articles, but for some time Grandpa remained near his bed.

Anton came up and stood comfortingly by the old man. "I am glad. Dere is foolishness in your family."

Grandpa nodded.

"Vill you come back mebbe?"

"To Cain's."

At last, the long day was over. The lunch wagon had folded up its sides and gone back to town. The yard was trampled by many feet; paper was littered everywhere. Gates stood open; but it did not matter now. Most of the stock had been sold and driven away. It had been arranged that the family was to stay overnight with Ida and Clarence; then the next morning go to town and get on the train. The new owner moved briskly here and there, taking charge.

It is truly amazing how much the going away of one family can mean. It is, almost, as if your don't know how important they were until they were gone. There still was the house and there were the barns and outbuildings, but the spirit that once inhabited them was gone. The new man on the Kennedy farm was no force in the community; he lived to himself and for himself. Sunday afternoons no neighbors sat under the hard maples; nobody came in to weigh. There were no teams at the hitch racks. No lights twinkled at night.

Meantime, I was growing older; I was selling a little here and there. Not much, but how completely thrilling it was when I did. I wanted to go to New York. But did I dare . . . where all those smart people were? I read a novel of newspaper life entitled. "The Great God Success." It thrilled me and filled me and at last the great decision was made.

No More Clippings About the Kennedys

I can still see the scene in our sitting room, the night before I left. Pa in his big rocking chair; his plowshoes on the floor beside him, for every evening he took them off to ease his feet. Phebe across the table from him in what we called "the little rocker." The Coleman pressure lamp makes a pleasant hissing sound. Pa warns me of the dangers of New York—Pa, who since he arrived on our farm, has never been a hundred miles from it.

The next day he and Phebe drove me to the depot; the train came in, I shook hands, the train pulled out. There the two stood, looking after me. Pa waved a brown hand. I was suddenly filled with emotion; I was leaving home . . . would I ever return?

But I did! How glad I was to be home. How I hated to go back to New York. Sometimes I thought it would be best for me to stay on the farm. Yet New York was where I must try to get ahead. Pa talked to me about the farm. The farm was in good condition; not a dollar on it, fine producing black loam, I could have an independent life, nobody could boss me around. The appeal was deep. Yet there was the kind of work I wanted so desperately to do.

The clippings continued to come. But none about the Kennedys. Most people, who leave their old neighbors, send a stream of letters home; but there were hardly any from the Kennedys. And most people who pull up want their old neighbors to come to see them. But none of our neighbors got invitations. The feeling developed that the city had gone to their heads.

I met the Iowa man. How dull and drab and self-centered he was compared to neighborly Newt. The house reflected him. The old dinner bell was gone, the bell that'd brought me galloping so many times.

He put in a milking machine run by a gasoline engine which gave off enough noise to make any cow in the world hold up her milk. But the cows had got used to it; the engine throbbed steadily.

And there is the place where Newt whacked out his chip. And where grandpa struggled so desperately to hang up his feather bed. And where the detective had almost had Ida. And where the bower stood and where Clarence Duncan squeaked "I do," and where the organ thundered "Blessed Be the Tie That Binds," and where the woodpecker turned loose at exactly the wrong moment. I suddenly realize these are all small things. But they were the things that made up our lives. They might not be important to anyone else; but they were vital to us.

Newt Revisits Delinskys' Farm

Now that I was 1,300 miles from Newt's old farm, I was beginning to see that his farm and his life and the life of his family was typical of many thousands of families in the great corn lands of the Middle West. That this was the very heart-center of America. But while I had been living there I hadn't thought about this. We had just lived and worked and done the best we could. One day, at this time, I saw a statement that corn was the most important crop grown in America — more important than wheat, or cotton, or oranges. It staggered me. I'd never dreamed it was so important. It almost made me wish I hadn't grumbled so much.

I had got a job on a women's magazine. But in a way, I was still back home. Every week there was Phebe's letter and its batch of clippings, with the date of each clipping in indelible pencil. I wrote Newt, trying to tell him I was doing well but without quite saying so . . . for that wasn't true. There was a long silence, then came a penny post office card. He was glad I was doing so well and would like to see me. It was signed H. N. Kennedy. A fear came over me; was he losing his zest for life? If he had only signed it "The One-Horse Farmer"! I dreaded to see him; maybe he was going to pieces.

Time passed. Now and then Newt seemed to avoid coming into his old neighborhood; bitter memories, no doubt. Sometimes, however, he did with a spring wagon made to carry tools and repair parts. On the side was the name of his firm. He came at night and was away early the next morning. There he was, in his city clothes, with lead pencils, fountain pens and folding rulers sticking out of his breast pocket; and carrying a portfolio of what he called "literature." Across the front page of each folder was painted with a rubber stamp in purple ink the name of his store and below this, his own name and the word "Ag't."

The land lure was too much; pulling off to the city is no cure. Sometimes it makes it worse. Most poignant of all is the call of the old family farm. Where Grandpa planted that plow, where the children were born, where cyclones played havoc.

One day Newt pulled up at Anton's and a fine family came flopping out to see him. Could it be possible these were in maturity the outlandish children who had come to our school? Anton comes, too, on the portly side now, and reaches out a ham and pumps Newt's softish hand. "Vell! So dis is Newt? Yah." The two scan each other, each busy with his own thoughts.

Unconsciously, almost, they start to walk across Anton's farm; now and then they scoop up a cocklebur. The things'll ruin any farm.

And now they've seen it and are back at the barn. Leonard comes in with a matched pair. On the bits and hames are gaily colored iron-cored, celluloid-coated rings. Newt's eyes fill . . . once he had horses like these.

"Vill do," says Anton modestly.

"Iss best."

"And you've got square blind-bridles an' double hipstrap britchin'."

"Yah. Everything."

"Yah, flat."

Now they've seen everything; they bring the resting bench out of the barn. "How you get 'long in the city?" Anton asks as they seat themselves.

"Just fine, Anton! I tell you, Anton, a farm is no place to live. What do you get out of it? Nothing but hard work. Distemper, mastitis, blackleg. I never have to give a thought to such things."

Anton nods thoughtfully. "Yah. I guess dot's right. No mastitis in the city."

"I should say not! Lots of people don't even know what it is."

"Goot t'ing they don't. Nothin' worse."

"You remember it pretty near throwed you in court when you were getting your papers!"

Anton's brown, lined face broke into a grin. "Yah, purty near. But I read him. Yudge said I did."

They speak of other things. Finally Newt says with an effort at casualness: "That Iowa man's not much good as a farmer, is he?"

"Goot to raise dog-fennel."

They laugh.

"You see the land," continues Anton, "washed most out; ditches you could throw a hay frame, makes you sick."

Newt is silent.

"Listen, Newt, why don't you buy back your farm? You don't really vant to sell vindmills, do you?"

"Sure." A long silence; pigeons coo on the ridgepole; a mule colt comes up and sniffs, then goes loping away pretending to be scared to death. "Do you suppose he would sell?"

"He had better or he lose his shirts. Won't neighbor with anybody. Won't swap work. Maybe you want to buy?"

Newt moves uneasily, "Y'see, I put my money into the store, but most of it is gone now."

"I wouldn't want you to do that, Anton," Newt says thickly.

"I could put some paper on my feeding steers. I am not a poor man."

"I wouldn't want you to put paper on your steers, Anton. I—I couldn't do that."

"I am puttin' paper on my steers," says Anton firmly. "You want to see my millet?"

"Paper is always dangerous, Anton."

"Not with big fam'ly. You see everything but millet."

Newt Asks The Blessing

Side by side they walked out to the millet. It waved in the sun. Meadow larks flew up. "The best winter feed there is," says Newt. "Do you remember when you first came you didn't like it?"

"Me? I always like millet! Sellin' vindmills makes your mind weak."

They walk back and sit again on the resting bench; it is carved with many initials and has paint daubs and fantastic drawings.

"I am putting paper," says Anton.

They go to the house. There framed and hanging proudly on the wall, is Anton's naturalization "paper" and over it is a flag. Newt's eyes and Anton's meet and the two men think of that day. Anton's wife and children have been busy; a white table cloth is on and city napkins are placed fashionably in tumblers. There is a blue water pitcher with stylish blisters and there are glasses to match. "I guess you would ask a grace," says Anton and Newt bows a head that is strangely like old Grandpa's.

They want to hear about the city. Newt tries to puff it up, but there is no ring. Now and then he glances across at Anton.

Anton addresses his family, "An now I vill tell you somet'ing. He has got the foolishness out of his head. No more vindmills."

Household Hints

Bread Box

To insure the fullest protection of bakery products, keep the bread box clean. Wash and scald the container, and air-dry it thoroughly twice a week in winter and every other day in summer. Do not stand bread boxes near heat units in the kitchen, such as ranges, radiators, water heaters and clothes dryers. On the other hand a cold pantry will cause the bread to stale faster. Bread boxes should not be too airy unless the products themselves are stored in moisture-proof wrappers.

Horseradish With Ham

Horseradish sauce is delicious with cold ham; to make it, whip a half cup of cream and add a quarter cup of drained, prepared horseradish to it along with a half cup of creamed cottage cheese, a half tablespoon of vinegar and a quarter teaspoon of salt.

Freeze Leftover Waffles

If you've made too many waffles wrap them in moisture, vaporproof material and place them in your home freezer. When ready to use heat them in your automatic toaster at the lightest setting.

Initialing Luggage

Mark all your luggage with your married initials, as they are for the purpose of identification.

Heat Was On

"How old is Grandpa Higginbottom?" "I don't know, but when the cake was brought in at his last birthday party, the room grew so hot they had to open all the windows."

One of England's great athletes was James Figg, renowned as the originator of bare knuckle fighting. He was also a swordsman of ability and a fine wrestler.

Should Minnesota taxpayers be treated alike?

"WE FOLKS IN SOUTHERN MINNESOTA should try to be a mite more understanding with regard to our mining industry," suggests D. L. Keith, editor of the Cottonwood County Citizen (Windom). "We should see to it that the companies who have poured millions into Minnesota's iron ore mines shall not hesitate to pour millions more into plants to process taconite. That means we must be reasonable about taxes. Mining companies deserve no more consideration than other property holders, but they DO deserve as much."

Keith

IF YOU AGREE that Minnesota taxpayers should be treated alike, you may be surprised to learn how differently they ARE treated.

Take property taxes. Like you, the iron ore producers pay a general property tax. But what a difference in assessment. Minnesota farm-homesteads are assessed at 20% of full and true value, farm lands at 33⅓%, industrial real estate at 40%. But iron ore is assessed at 50%.

1948 ore property taxes were $13,250,000. Now it's true that the bill HAS run even higher: in 1921, for instance, some $18 million. Why did the dollar yield drop? Simply because, since 1921, America has used up most of the high-value iron ore then in the ground. Actually, because the mill rate has risen so sharply, the BURDEN of ore property taxes is far heavier than ever.

Take another kind of iron ore tax—occupation and royalty taxes. In 1921, the rate was 6%, and the amount paid to Minnesota, $2,200,000. In 1948 the rate was 11% (it is now 12%); the amount paid for 1948 for royalty and occupation taxes alone, $13,600,000. (In contrast, other Minnesota industries paid a corporate income tax at a rate of 5.4% to 6%.)

Of course the iron ore producers know full well that Minnesota looks to them for substantial tax revenues. But HOW SUBSTANTIAL can they be? Today this industry is at the crossroads. Its future—along with the taxes it can pay and the number of people it can employ—depends upon the costly development of low-grade and taconite ores. And the tax treatment the iron ore industry now gets will naturally help shape this future.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

Great Northern's New Trains

St. Paul, Minn. Great Northern Railway announced that three new streamliners will go into regular service on fast schedules in late June after exhibition tours of their routes.

Two, both christened the International, go on the 155 mile run between Seattle, Wash. and Vancouver, B. C., starting June 18. The third, the Red River, is to oporate on the 320 mile route between St. Paul-Minneapolis and Grand Forks beginning June 25.

The five cars in each train were built by American Car and Foundry Comyany and the 2,000 horsepower single-unit diesel-electric locomotives were constructed by Electro-Motive Division of General Motors Corporation.

Each International has seating capacity of 180, not including room for 24 in the cafe. Each train has a mail baggage car, two coaches, a cafe-coach and a parlor-lounge car.

The Red River will depart from Grand Forks in the morning. Returning, the train will leave the Twin Cities in late afternoon. Time between Grand Forks and Minneapolis will be six hours, with 30 minutes more for St. Paul.

The Red River will seat 200 passengers, not counting coffee shop and dining space for 21. The five cars include a mail-baggage, three coaches and a cafe-parlor car.

Topdressing Pastures Adds Grazing Days, Boosts Legume Yields

CHICAGO—Milk pails will be fuller next spring and you will get bigger dividends from extra grazing days and more tons of hay, if you topdress your pastures and grasslands this fall with phosphate and potash fertilizer.

Fertilizer added in the fall helps deep-rooted legumes and grasses make a sturdier, fuller growth, says the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee. The roots dig themselves in more firmly. The plants weather the winter in better condition for early spring growth.

Earlier spring growth means a longer grazing season. It means fewer days of barn feeding for your cows.

Agronomists recommend adding heavy amounts of phosphate and potash fertilizer to pastures and grasslands. Tests at state agricultural stations show that applications of 300 to 600 pounds per acre produce profitable results.

THE START IS IMPORTANT IN PROFITABLE FEEDING

Get those chicks or poults off to a good start—and when egg-laying season, or the holiday turkey marketing season comes along, you'll be in there for more than your share of profits. The same thing's true of feeding hogs—the start determines the entire life of the animal.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

GM-UAW Sign Five-Year Contract; June Grad Job Prospects 'Good'; Fuchs Puts Finger on U. S. Spy

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

LABOR:

Historic Contract

An unprecedented five-year contract, hailed by labor and management alike as an important stabilization move in the labor world, has been signed by General Motors Corp., and the CIO United Auto Workers.

In the eyes of many, the most startling thing about the contract was not its terms and duration, but the fact that both management and labor are happy about it.

The agreement includes a four cents an hour increase, $100 pensions for retired workers, and a cost of living formula. The union estimated immediate benefits total 19 cents an hour.

Walter Reuther, UAW-CIO president, described the agreement as "the most significant development in labor relations since the mass production industries were organized."

Speaking for management, GM vice president Harry Anderson said the unusual and unexpected agreement was "historic in labor-management relations."

The contract is the longest ever written in the industry and assures the company of five years of uninterrupted production.

Labor observers are almost unanimous in their agreement that such contracts—long term ones—would exert a stabilizing influence on all industry.

In Washington, Secretary of Labor Tobin said the contract is "great news."

"It means that there is confidence in the future prosperity of this industry and its ability to produce so efficiently that it can continue to pay higher wages, and at the same time insure greater security for its workers when they are ill or retired," he said.

ESPIONAGE:

Successful Spy

The attorney general has announced the capture of another spy, Harry Gold, 39, of Philadelphia. As usual with the capture of a spy in the United States, the agent had operated very successfully, delivering, according to reports, top atomic bomb secrets to Russia.

Gold, whose family name is Goldnitsky, "has admitted his contacts with Dr. Klaus Fuchs, the imprisoned British atomic scientist, and has given a detailed account of his activities," the announcement said.

Gold was reported to have received written and oral information concerning atomic projects in this country and delivered them to agents of the Soviet Union.

"I thought that I would be helping a nation whose final aims I approved along the road to industrial strength. Particularly was I taken with the idea that whatever I did would go to help make living conditions far more advanced along the road as we know them here in the United States," Gold said.

The charge against Gold said that he did "conspire" to obtain "documents, writings, sketches, notes and information relating to the national defense and with intent and reason to believe that it was to be used to the injury of the United States and to the advantage of a foreign nation, to wit, the Union of Soviet Socialistic Republics . . ."

A number of observers were beginning to wonder if the United States has any atomic secrets left.

DRAFT LAW:

Its 'Draftless'

By a vote of 216 to 11, the house extended the selective service law for two years and sent the measure to the senate for its approval.

The measure has been called a "draftless" draft because it would be extended on a stand-by basis. Youths attaining their 18th birthdays would be required to register as at present, but they could not be ordered into uniform unless congress declared the existence of a national emergency requiring expansion of the armed forces.

Before passing the measure, Chairman Vinson of the armed services committee, told the house that "this nation must be prepared for an indefinite time in the future to counter promptly, with every means available, an attack by modern weapons."

QUINTUPLETS:

No Boy Friends

To millions in Canada and the United States it seems like only yesterday that the nation's newspapers carried headlines of the birth of the Dionne quintuplets. In the minds of many they are still little girls.

The rude awakening came with the recent observance of their 16th birthday. But Papa Dionne said the girls would have no boy friends for two more years.

Held as Spy

Harry Gold, 29, of Philadelphia, held under $100,000 bond, is charged with assisting the convicted British spy, Klaus Fuchs, in handing over vital atomic secrets to Russia.

GRADUATES:

Job Prospects Good

Four out of every five job-hungry June college graduates will be employed by October 1, though many will have to hunt harder and longer than did the class of '49. This is an average of the estimates of placement officials reporting in a survey of 128 colleges and universities made by Northwestern National Life Insurance company.

Actually 1950 will be a good year for the job-seeking college graduate—not as good as 1949, but much better than was considered normal in pre-war years, the report said.

Four out of every five schools in the survey—102—report that starting salaries are as high this year as in 1949—a few find the average slightly higher.

Initial salaries for business school and liberal arts seniors generally range from $175 to $275 a month; for engineering and other sciences, $225 to $350. A few outstanding seniors get higher offers, of course, ranging up to $400 a month for outstanding advanced-degree men, the survey finds.

While a few schools and individual departments reached their peak of senior enrollments in 1949, most campuses have considerably longer cap-and-gown parades this year, with more graduates seeking jobs.

The vast majority of schools report their seniors to be pretty well prepared mentally for job competition—"more realistic," and "down to earth."

"Graduates realize that jobs are a little scarcer, but are putting more effort and thought into hunting work," reports the College of Business Administration of the University of Texas.

A great majority of employers contacted are optimistic, at least for the immediate business future. The University of Notre Dame, which finds employment demand "somewhat less this year but not as much less as anticipated," observes, "The majority of employers with whom we have talked appear to feel that the period immediately ahead will be good for business, but many are still 'uncertain.'"

Says the University of Buffalo's report: "The feeling is that business is seeeling down. The boom is over, but prospects remain good on the whole."

Regarding the outlook for women graduates, Ohio State University reports, "The most opportunities are for girls who can combine secretarial skills with their major studies." Another typical comment on this phase, from the University of Chicago: "Professional types of positions continue to be scarce, but stenographic and secretarial opportunities are far in excess of our supply of women trained in those fields."

AIR FORCE:

Asks 200 Million

Backed by Secretary of Defense Johnson, air force leaders had asked for $200,000,000 increase in the budget to cover the purchase of new aircraft and the modernization of existing tactical and training planes.

Air force officials reported the present budget would only pay for 42 modern groups by 1956. The force today includes 8,600 aircraft of all types. Of these 3,100 are combat planes and 5,500 are utility aircraft.

On V-J Day the army air force had 37,000 combat planes.

Saucers

Flying saucers jumped back into the news with the announcement of a new book entitled "Flying Saucers Are Real." It was the government, not the book, however, that made the news.

The government protested its publication on the grounds it made public "information vital to national defense." That statement caused the lifting of a number of eyebrows.

RED CHINA:

Almost in U. N.

The British labor government had spoken out for admission of Communist China to the United Nations. Which meant, most observers agreed, it was now only a matter of time until it became an actuality.

Political students based their reasoning on the fact that France will not stand in the way of admitting the Communists, and, the American position is that the U.S. will not sponsor Red China but will agree to any majority decision.

Ernest Bevins, Britain's foreign secretary, in a statement to the house of commons, said:

"We think it is better for the new China to be inside the U.N. We do not want to ostracize anyone on political grounds."

No matter how one wishes the picture to appear, observers said acceptance of Red China into the United Nations means the Nationalist cause is a lost one. It is now publicly admitted.

Interwoven in the picture was the cautiously worded statement from U. N. Secretary General Trygve Lie in London that there is hope of ending the cold war by careful negotiation.

What is there to negotiate the cynics wanted to know? France, Britain and the United States will accept Communist China and Russia will come back into the United Nations—for as long as it pleases her. When it is expedient, she will withdraw again.

GERMANY:

New Army?

The three big western powers—United States, France and Britain—have protested to the Soviet Union of the creation of a police force and militia of 50,000 men with "the character of an army" in eastern Germany.

Obviously based on recent reports by deserters, the three governments charge the force is not "an ordinary police force, and it does not have ordinary police duties." Its weapons, the note of protest said, include machine guns, howitzers, anti-aircraft cannon, mortars, and tanks, and it receives basic infantry, artillery and armored training.

"It must be regarded, therefore, as a military force," the United States note protested.

Observers agreed that the United States was not worried so much about the military capabilities of this force at present. This government is concerned, however, with the fact it could form the nucleus of a new German army or "an internal security force to maintain Communist control."

POTATO BUGS:

Latest Laugh

Every once in a while, the Russians come up with a conspiracy that is so ridiculous it gets a belly-laugh from many nations. If nothing else, the latest one at least relieved the tension of international affairs for a moment.

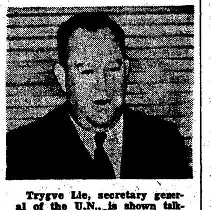
According to reports circulated by radio from Soviet dominated East Germany, the American planes flew over forbidden areas of the occupied zone, that is, outside the prescribed air corridors to Berlin—and spread potato bugs.

In all seriousness the Germans reported:

"Potato bugs were found in bunches up to 100 after an American plane had passed. There is great indignation among the population about this criminal plot."

The American airmen laughed heartily and one said he didn't know there was a potato bug east of Kansas.

Visits Stalin



Trygve Lie, secretary general of the U.N., is shown talking to newsmen on his arrival from Europe, including a trip to Moscow where he conferred with Joseph Stalin. He remarked the cold war could be ended by "careful negotiation."

JAPAN:

Russians Sail

The unexpected departure of the Russian mission to Japan, including Lt. Gen Kuzma Derevyanko and 48 staff members, started rumors that the Kremlin was not happy about the mission's activities in Japan.

According to some observers, the Russians have come out second best in a long running quarrel with Gen. MacArthur over nearly every phase of the occupation.

AROUND THE HOUSE

Sunday Breakfast

Add new interest to an old favorite by serving sliced bananas between two or three helpings of golden French toast, made from nutritious enriched bread. Then smother all with maple syrup, jelly, or confectioners' sugar. Crisp bacon, hot pork sausages, or fried ham make this tempting fare perfect for Sunday morning breakfasts or daily lunches. Try it with other fresh and canned fruits too. It's a real treat.

Extending Soups

Add to the appetite appeal and nutritive value of your favorite soups by serving them with croutons made from crusts of enriched bread. Simply cut the crusts into cubes, and saute them in butter or margarine until golden brown, adding onion and celery salt for flavor.

Good Dessert

Here's a gorgeous dessert for your family. And it's so simple. Slice donuts crosswise and place one half in the bottom of each dish. Cover with maple syrup and add the other donut half. Fill and top with more maple syrup and garnish with cherry or walnut.

Buffet Near Pass Door

If you want a pass door in the wall between the kitchen and dining room, be sure it opens onto a buffet or built-in serving counter on both sides of the wall.

Coffee to Horse Radish

Use an after dinner coffee spoon for old-fashioned cocktails or tiny bowls of mustard or horse radish.

Germans Mad About Burlesque Shows

Nearly every big-city German night club has at least one female performer whose specialty is undressing in public. The customers flock in droves to this new wrinkle in German entertainment. It reminds old time Germans of the spicy entertainment that sprang up after World War I.

The girl most West Germans prefer to see is a sloe-eyed brunette named Laya Raki. She says she is half Dutch and half Indonesian.

She does a dance called "The Indian Gravestone" which definitely is out of the cemetery class and which leaves her quite chilly from the waist up. Since Miss Raki is a girl who might give pause to Jane Russell, the customers love it.

They blow foam off seidels of beer and applaud wildly when her gold scarf is discarded and she dances in a smile and a G-string.

A tour of Frankfurt night clubs yields a bounteous harvest of undressed entertainment, but the German version of the American strip tease rarely is subtle.

In one night club a flashily dressed master of ceremonies announced Miss so-and-so would dance a tango.

A weary orchestra thumped away while a black-haired fraulein trudged aimlessly about wearing a G-string and two feather fans. Occasionally she dropped her fans to bare her chest to the enthusiastic audience.

It was anything but a tango but nobody seemed to mind.

One night club run by a German woman has rung in another version of undressed entertainment.

Every night at 12 o'clock a 10-minute motion picture of seminude girls is shown.

The scenes are set in the night club. While a man and woman hold hands amorously, girls with bare chests and loin cloths made of artificial butterflies or orchids simper daintly.

It has the place packed every night.

JUST JESTING

Disqualified

The guests at a party were playing a game to see who could make the worst grimace. The prize was awarded to a man seated somewhat apart from the others. "I'm sorry," he apologized, when the presentation was made, "but I wasn't playing."

The bride of a few weeks noticed that her husband was depressed.

"Gerald, dearest," she said, "I know something is troubling you, and I want you to tell me what it is, your worries are not your worries now — they are our worries."

"Oh, very well, then," he said. "We've just had a letter from a girl in New York, and she's suing us for breach of promise."

ASK YOUR DOCTOR ABOUT SANO CIGARETTES

WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR

by HOMER CROY

A prodigal son of northwest Missouri, Homer Croy drove along a country road amid scenes of his youth. As he sees familiar sights, he associates them with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he'd ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their daughters, Ida and Lucy; their son, Harlan, his childhood pal. He remembers another homecoming—when he returned from college for his mother's funeral. There were happy times, too, he recalls—times like the watermelon party at the Kennedys', and Ida's happy wedding day. Then he remembers when Newt sold his farm, and went into the farm implement business in St. Joe. Then one day Newt visited Anton Delinsky.

CHAPTER XXII

At last I was "home"; and that was exactly what it was. And on my way down the road, along the osage hedgerows, past the corner post . . . the very ones I'd helped plant. I think about the "deadman" at the bottom; what an alluring name for a crosspiece. Words were becoming more fascinating; how much one could do with the right one. But Ah! that is the catch.

In all the world is there anything so stirring—quite so heart-pulling—as returning to the scene of your early days? There are the things you've forgotten; and the things you can never forget. Why! right here is where I killed that turtledove, where it fell into the road and got dust in its dying eyes.

A car roars by. But what I think of is the one that chugged and throbbed along here with the city dude at the tiller and Ida in the seat. My! that was ages ago. Yet it wasn't, I'm still pretty young. I catch a wider view. How much has happened in America in my comparatively few years. Strangers look at our farms and at our ways of life and think we don't change at all. I know better.

There is the white house with the yellow trim.

I see Newt coming through the orchard, a pail on his arm. My mind somersaults back. Why! it must have been right along here that Newt had been picking apples when Anton Delinsky had come, scared to death about his windcribber.

I walked toward Newt, my heart thumping like a churn. He looks older, his hair gray now; that fine, hay-pitching figure is settling into lumps.

"I'm pressing out some cider," he says.

~~As he pours the apples in, we talk,~~ I suddenly realize that Newt has always been busy at some work as we talked. "Think of you bein' away off in New York?" Wonder flickers in his eye. I feel a tremendous warmth for Newt who has never been so far away as even Chicago.

"What do you do?" he asks.

Well, I say, I sit at a desk and I read things people have sent in and I mark if I think they are good or bad; also I paste up a booklet of excerpts from articles that are going to appear in the magazine and mail them out to exchange editors.

It just about stumps the old One-Horse Farmer. "Think of that!" he says, trying to pretend he believes it is important.

Newt Tells of His Father's Death

His eyes open. "My! My! Think of that. Did you have success with your fly campaign?"

I move uneasily. "We think it helped."

"I'll bet it did." Nothing can shake his faith in me.

"How did you get along in St. Joe?" I ask.

He mounts the platform, seizes the big iron wheel and begins to screw it down.

"I wasn't content. I was like a colt that's been out in a pasture, then's put in a pen. You know how he walks first to one side and sticks his head over and gazes off in the distance; then walks to the other side of the pen and sticks his head over and gazes off? I thought it'd wear off, but it didn't. Got worse, if anything. Sundays was the hardest of all. Nothing to do, just sit there. I'd go over in my mind all the things we used to do back on the farm, like weighing the stock an' walkin' out across, neighbors droppin' in. Have some cider. That's one of the pleasures of cider makin'—tastin' it as you make it." He took the long-handled dipper and filled it. I swigged it down.

"Did you have much trouble to get the farm back?"

"Well . . . yes. My Rooshan helped me." He smiles as only Newt can.

"Can you tell me about the last days of your father?" I asked, wanting to hear and yet dreading to.

"It was hard on the old gentleman. Faded like a stalk of corn with cutworms at its roots. Couldn't adjust himself to city ways; got up every mornin' same time as he always did. Would sit around waitin' for daylight to come. When a load of calves would go by on their way to the packer's, he would shake his head and say, 'I don't even know what calves are bringin' now.'

"Evenings was hard on him; couldn't go out to the barn an' help with the chores. One day they had Pioneer Day and he was invited to sit on the platform. That was the best day he had, talkin' with the old-timers and askin' when they crossed.

"One morning he came in with a mess o' greens. He'd gone into the city park and cut them. We told him if they'd seen him they would have arrested him.

"'It'd be wuth it,' he said." Newt laughed in fond remembrance. "Finally he passed away."

". . . On his feather bed?"

"Yes. I can't tell you how much comfort that old bed was to him." A moment's silence. "I'm sure glad he didn't part with it the day of the sale. Old people get set in things. He's layin' in Cain's."

There is a faint, distance chugging; at first I hardly hear it, then it grows stronger and more persistent. "That's Harlan," says Newt. We walk toward the barn—and there is something I have never seen before on the Kennedy farm. Mounted on it is Harlan. I stare, indeed, at Harlan and think how times are changing. A tractor! This very land where old Grandpa with an ox team sank the first plowpoint ever to go into the buffalo grass. Can it be possible I've seen all this with my own eyes? And me . . . not so very old, either.

Harlan pulls off his pigskin glove and thrusts out his brown hand.

Harlan pulls off his pigskin glove and thrusts out his brown hand. My foolish heart thumps. We speak of old times. Harlan asks a few questions about "the East," but not many. That vague, faraway world has little interest. Farming! That is the important thing, must liquidate the mortgage. Then add to the farm.

I have a foolish dream. I look down the road and wish I could see Anton Delinsky coming! I look . . . But it is only a dream. However, I ask about him. Newt's eyes light up. Say, Anton is one of the best farmers in the township! He's got a big fine farm, lots of power machinery, has him a good car, children turning out well. Most of them are married and settled down on farms. Newt's voice takes on a note of disappointment . . . One has gone off to the city. "I expect he'll regret it," he says.

We start to the house. A scythe hangs in a hard maple. The tree has reached out and wrapped the blade in its own flesh. I remember when that scythe was put there.

I Have Become Front Door Company

The path forks; one side leads to the front door, the other to the back. Newt chooses the one leading to the front. I know what that means. I'm front door company now . . . with people I've known all my life! We're growing apart. We approach the porch. Why, right there is where Grandpa used to sit and denounce the automobiles! Where we used to have our melon parties. The porch across which Mrs. Kennedy carried the mover baby.

Mrs. Kennedy hears our voices and comes out. She extends a hand. "So this is little Homer!" I give a private jump. Is there anyone living to whom I once was little? . . . me, over six feet. I am struck by how much older she looks; gray hair, a thickening of the shoulders just suggesting a stoop. "We're awfully proud to have one of our old neighbors away off in New York."

"I'm always thinking about home," I say with sudden feeling.

"You have your mother's look around the eyes. There never was a better neighbor." I am touched and, almost, for a moment I feel my mother is on the porch with us . . . This from Me!

We march into the sitting room . . . The kitchen not being good enough for New York company. I gaze secretly around. That miserable Iowa man has ripped it all up. I look up at the ceiling for the gunshot wound. It's gone. I look for the calendar on the wall with the dates encircled to show when the cows will freshen. Gone.

A car whirls by. Not a soul looks out. I speak of this, for I am thinking of the old days when a spring wagon fetched the whole family. "They pass all the time," says Mrs. Kennedy. And that is the end of that.

We talk about everything, jumping from one subject to another, as old friends do when they have much to say and little time to say it. "Are you glad to be back?" I ask; this is the question I dread.

Newt and Harlan turn toward her expectantly. I feel—so eager am I to have her say the right thing—a little breathless.

"It was nice. The kitchen was handy, the work was so easy. Cook by gas!" She paused; the wonder of that still held her. "I had wanted all my life to sleep late of a morning. But I couldn't. After a while it wasn't so nice. I didn't know anybody; nobody seemed to want to know me. I went to church, the preacher shook hands with me, but he was about the only one. I began to miss the sounds I had known so long—the stock and the chickens, the windmill turning, the colts playing. All I got was street noises. I kept following the seasons. The cherries are ripe now. Then the Red Junes. The Golden Bantam is coming on. In the fall I'd make my grape jelly. I could see the straining bags hanging in the kitchen, each with a bowl under it. I'd think about the fried chicken picnics we used to go on." She pauses, suddenly self-conscious. "It sounds foolish—to anyone from New York, doesn't it?"

"It does not," I say firmly.

Her voice falls; a note of foreboding comes into it. "Of course we've got a mortgage. And we're not as young as we used to be."

"Now don't you give that a thought, Minnie," booms Newt. "Give me five years and there won't be a dollar on the land."

I Learn of Lucy's Wedding Plans

And now I do learn something, indeed. Lucy is going to marry Frank Carter and move to Los Angeles. Silence! Newt stirs uneasily. "They've got them a good farm here, but nothing'll do them except California."

After a time we are in the sitting room; the pressure lamp is purring away. Suddenly the others raise their ears. A car is stopping. There is the swish-swish of someone coming through the yard; footsteps on the porch, then a knuckle rapping.

Newt throws open the door and there he is. He looks at me and I look at him—both of us a bit startled. Can this fine specimen be Anton Delinsky? As we shake hands and felicitate I think of the Welcome Party and how he danced a steppes hoedown right in this very room; and I think of the Prize Ear, the Windcribber, the Little Building and of the Beautiful Beard.

I realize I have seen a miracle take place before my eyes—seen this very man turn from an outlandish Rooshan into an up-and-coming American citizen. Newt senses this. "Not so bad, is he? Still mule-headed sometimes. But he don't believe in polygamy any more."

We talk. Children doing well. Lizzie has herself a good man. They have a mortgage, but they're young people.

Newt moves uneasily. "They better watch it." He wants to impress his company. "Homer has been in New York helping conduct a campaign against the housefly."

"There's nothing the country needs more," says Newt loyally.

Anton nods. "That's sure right. Nobody like a housefly."

Something is on Anton's mind; something evidently he is proud of. Finally it is out. He has stopped by on his way home to tell about somezing . . . a little accent, here . . . that happened in town today. The new Nodaway County Co-operative Association met and chose him chairman. He tries to appear modest.

Newt seizes that brown hand. "Good for you, Anton! Say! that's just fine. I don't know of a better man they could find for the place."

Almost, for a moment, I think Anton is going to say, "Iss goot." But not at all.

"I'll give it what I've got," he says.

Anton goes. But I stay and we talk on, a thousand memories, many laughs, little silences . . . the dead, old neighbors, old comrades, old loves. Newt is studying me from under his graying eyebrows. "Do you really like it back East?"

"Yes," I said firmly.

At last I get up. Newt puts on his shoes and goes outside with me. We stand talking—how close, sometimes, you seem to come to a person in the night. We shake hands and I start down the road. I look back at the house outlined against the clouds. From behind the house comes a sharp, clanking, rattling, familiar sound. It is Newt pumping up a drink. I continue on down the road. There is a light in the Croy house. Phebe is sitting up for me. Pa is tired. Long day. And he's getting old, too. I really ought to stay and help run the farm. But there is that desperate longing in me that has been with me all my life.

Historic Doubters

When the Italian Galileo 300 years ago dared to question an age-old theory by Aristotle that heavy objects fall faster than light ones, learned men scoffed, scolded and finally brought Galileo to trial for his beliefs. So, he climbed the Leaning Tower of Pisa, dropped a half-pound weight and a 100-lb. cannon ball. They fell together. Even then, the wise men ran home to point out the exact page and line in Aristotle's writings to "prove" Galileo wrong.

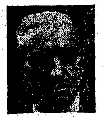
Abundance of Gold

Since gold rush days of the early 1850's, Oregon has produced gold valued at more than 100 million dollars.



How to squeeze iron out of solid rock

NOW IT CAN BE DONE—and Editor W. L. Robertson of the Fergus Falls Journal tells how. "Taconite," he writes, "exists in unlimited quantities in this state, but unlike the high-grade ore in some mines, that can be excavated like sand with a steam shovel, it exists in hard rock formation. To make use of it, this rock has not only to be mined, but ground to a fine powder. Only one quarter of the powder is iron, and the process of smelting and separating it from the waste material is slow and costly."

Robertson

YOU SAID IT, MR. ROBERTSON. Processing taconite ore is some job! And it's a job Minnesota's iron ore producers must take on soon.

The handwriting is plain. Heavy inroads have been made on our iron ore supply. It helped win two world wars—helped hoist America's living standard to a world peak—helped Minnesota by providing jobs, important support for state industries, and tax revenue.

We in this state are fortunate indeed that we have taconite which offers a chance to prolong the life of Minnesota's iron mining industry. But first certain things must be done —

- Money must be invested. As Mr. Robertson says, you don't just shovel up this kind of ore. You manufacture it. That calls for new "ore factories"—possibly $500 million worth of them.
- Men must be hired. It takes more than twice the manpower to produce a ton of taconite concentrate, versus open-pit ore.
- "Tools" must be bought. Expensive new machinery must be purchased and installed. Far more supplies will be needed.

Will these things be done? The present producers of Minnesota ore sincerely hope so. What's more, they plan to do them—provided they find that taconite ore can be processed cheaply enough to compete with high-grade ores from other areas.

Even today the mining firms are spending huge sums in seeking the best way to turn this promising taconite rock into usable iron ore.

But there's something else they need — something they must have in the trying days just ahead. That is assurance that their industry will get the same kind of tax treatment as other Minnesota industries—that Minnesotans will soon insist upon a stable, reasonable ore tax policy.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Oh—My Aching Feet!

Other night just as I was settling down with a book and a mellow glass of beer, the wife calls down, "Joe—I almost forgot—you and I are going over to the High School and take dancing lessons!"

Now, I can waltz with the best of them, so I put up a quiet struggle against going but it was no use. Turns out it was the class in square dancing. And from the look on some of the other men I judged I wasn't the only one there who had been taken by surprise!

Miss Williams and Curly Lawson taught us what to do with our feet, and before it was over, darn if I wasn't actually enjoying myself. Going back next week, too!

From where I sit, we sometimes get an idea into our head for or against something and then hang onto it for dear life. Whether it's square dancing, or the right to enjoy temperate beer or ale now and then, we owe it to ourselves as Americans to take an open-minded attitude — that's even after we make up our minds about it!

Horien-Root Wedding

The Nazareth Lutheran church was the scene of a beautiful candleht wedding at 9:00 o,clock Sunday evening when Darlene Elaine Horien, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Horien, became the bride of Clifford M. Root of Detroit Lakes, Rev. V. G. Sorenson officiating at the double ring ceremony.

Candlebras of tall, white lighted candles and baskets of lilacs and candles in the aisle furnished the setting for the cermony.

Nuptial music was played by Mrs. Henry Nohre. Mrs. Fred Seaberg sang "I Love You Truly" and "O, Perfect Love". Both were aunts of the bride and were gowned in pink and blue taffeta.

Prior to the bridal procession Ruth Larson and Gladys Ness wearing green and rose tafieta gowns, lit the candles. Each wore rhinestone necklaces.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. She was beautiful in a gown of nylon marquesette over satin, fashioned with fitted bodice, a sweetheart neckline with French lace and styled with long sleeves that came to a point over the hand. The full skirt extended into a long train. Her fingertip viel was held with a coronet of pearls and lilies of the valley.

Nancy Root of Detroit Lakes, niece of the groom, was flower girl and wore a white gown identical of the brides. She carried a basket of sweet peas.

Keith Peterson, cousin of the bride, was ring bearer, wearing a white coat and blue trousers. He carried the rings on a satin pillow with streamers.

Frank Root was his brothers best man, Emery Horien and Louis Sagstuen were ushers. All gentlemen wore white boutoniers

JUST JESTING

Very Funny

Johnny was being given a sound taning as punishment for breaking his mother's favorite vase. Far from having the desired effect, it seemed to be a cause for merriment, and Johnny shook with laughter. "Johnny," said his mother, sternly, "I should think you would take your punishment seriously. This is not a joke, you know." "Oh, but Mother, it is a joke," replied Johnny, "and it's on you. I didn't break the vase—Bobby did."

—WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS—

Japan Outlaws Communist Party; Europe Coal-Steel Pact Signed; U. S. Construction at New High

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

JAPAN:

Outlaws Reds

The Japanese Communist party received a serious setback with that government's announcement that the party would be outlawed in Japan.

Observers did not find the move surprising since such action had been hinted and only waited the outcome of the general election which was carried by Japan's Liberal party. The liberals alone stuck to a pro-United States policy in a highly nationalistic campaign.

Prime Minister Shigeru Yoshida had announced the action would be taken if there were further acts of violence by Communists. He referred to the attack on five U. S. soldiers at a Communist rally on Memorial Day.

As expected, the Communists tried to blame the action on the American occupation, but Yoshida quickly denied it.

Meanwhile, the Liberal party seemed assured of victory in the election. Despite rains throughout the country, the voting was heavier than expected. Officials said 31,400,000 voted, or 70 percent of those eligible. About 60 percent had been expected.

Yoshida's strong showing had been expected after his government firmly squelched projected Communist anti-American rallies and a so-called general strike called for election day.

COAL-STEEL PLAN:

Unites Six Nations

Britain's labor government has been caught short with the announcement that six European countries have formed a coal-steel alliance.

The United States gave the six countries — France, Holland, Belgium, Luxembourg, Western Germany, and Italy—its blessings, with, observers pointed out, an eye on the heavy gamble for postwar economic reconstruction of Europe as a means of further winning the cold war.

Under the plan, proposed by Robert Schuman, French foreign minister, the six nations have united to produce the sinews of heavy industry in peace.

Observers said it was fairly clear that Britain, struggling to win back a high place in world trade, was caught by surprise at the move.

The Schuman plan represents a historic surrender of national sovereignty of all the six countries in their economy. The pooled coal and steel industries will be directed by an independent international high authority.

Neutral observers were especially happy over the alliance. It is the first time in history that countries whose differences have caused numerous wars have gotten together to create a community of interests. This, observers contend, should eliminate the cause of wars.

Increased production is also expected from the merger. The total joint production could be far greater than the sum of their separate competitive efforts. It was pointed out, for example, the industrial Ruhr needs French coal and France needs the Ruhr steel but each put a permium on the materials they exchanged with each other.

Although the British have not joined the alliance or made any commitment on the plan, the way has been left open. Observers said it would certainly give the labor government something to think about.

BALTIC PLANE:

Evidence Damning

The United States produced new evidence that the navy patrol plane recently lost in the Baltic was shot down, although the Russians reported they only drove it out to sea.

State department officials said a recovered landing wheel indicated the plane had exploded in mid-air, and had possibly lost a wing before it spun into the sea.

The wheel floated because its tire was inflated with air. It was found by a Swedish fishing captain 48 miles off the Coast of Latvia.

A navy expert, Lt. Comdr. M. W. Cagle, exhibited the plane's front landing wheel, and pointed to a lever in a position showing that the wheel was retracted when the plane crashed.

MAUNA LOA:

Brilliant Fireworks

Mauna Loa, the 13,680-foot volcano on the island of Hawaii, turned on a brilliant display of fireworks for island tourists with the greatest eruption in history.

Fortunately, no lives were lost in the eruption that sent streams of molten lava across the island and into the sea. At some points where the lava entered the ocean, the water was reported near boiling far from shore.

Japs Riot

CONSTRUCTION:

At New High

Construction in the United States has reached a new high, according to reports by the department of labor.

According to department statistics, construction valued at nearly $2,000,000,000 was put in place in May. This was ahead of the 1948 and 1949 seasonal peaks.

Home construction accounted for much of the advance, although building costs have risen sharply.

Private construction in May amounted to $1,400,000,000, an increase of 12 per cent over April and 27 per cent over May of last year. The home building part of that was estimated at $825,000,000, an increase of 15 per cent over the month and 56 per cent from a year ago.

In the first five months of 1950, the total value of all types of new construction was nearly $8,100,000,000, an increase of 21 percent from the corresponding period of 1949, the labor department announced.

HARRY GOLD:

Patriotic Spy

Like the little boy who pinched off the icing on his mother's cake, Harry Gold, the American who turned against his own country to spy for Russia, wanted the sweet but didn't mean to spoil the cake.

Explained the Philadelphia biochemist, no doubt for a gullible American public, he delivered atom bomb secrets to Russia, but "I had no intention of hurting my country."

Such an explanation would not appease the intelligence of the six-year-old who pinched the icing. How can anyone give away the secrets of his country and not expect to hurt it, observers asked?

The Judy Coplon case and now the Gold affair have shocked the American public. Many Americans are remembering stern measures employed by founders of the nation in handling spies.

The business of espionage, under any circumstances, is a nasty thing. One is not inclined to be angry with a spy such as the Russian agent Gubitchev who was acting under orders. But to turn against your native land and give or sell its secrets is an entirely different matter

Now an admitted spy asks the court to appoint him counsel, which he insists be counsel whose patriotism is unimpeachable, with the respect of the court, the public, and the bar. Further, he insists upon the right to cooperate with the F.B.I.

SEARS, ROEBUCK:

Sharp Price Cuts

Sears, Roebuck and company, the world's largest retail merchandise business, has announced price reduction of up to 52 percent of 4,000 items in its midsummer sale catalogue.

The merchandising world was startled with the announcement of price cuts that averaged 7 per cent on the items. Seasonal wearing apparel was cut as much as 41 per cent.

More than twice as big as its nearest competitor, Sears, Roebuck and company was founded in 1886 and drew its greatest support from the farm population.

Although today Sears sells in the big cities, it still keeps its rural touch with all sorts of farm projects.

Employment

Employment in the United States reached its highest peak in May since last August, the census bureau announced in an optimistic report.

The number of jobless dropped from 3,515,000 in April to the May figure of 3,057,000. Employment jumped from 58,668,000 in April to 59,731,000 in May, a gain of 1,063,000. In May, 1949, there were 58,694,000 employed.

SUPREME COURT:

Three Decisions

The U. S. supreme court has handed down three decisions in the current civil rights controversy which will have far-reaching reactions.

The court held that segregation of Negroes in railroad dining cars violates the Interstate Commerce Act, that Negro students must be admitted to the University of Texas law school because the state does not afford them facilities equal to those for whites, and that Oklahoma had been discriminating against Negro students at its state university law school by segregating them in classrooms and elsewhere on the campus.

The court, however, did not go into the cases as deeply as the justice department desired.

For instance, the justice department argued there can be no such thing as "separate but equal" facilities and treatment. It contended the mere fact a Negro has to use a separate public facility prevents him from having an equal facility. It is just as sensible, the department argued, to say that a thing can be "black but white" as to insist it can be "separate and equal."

Observers point out that had the court gone into the matter as deeply as the department asked and ruled in its favor, there would have been practically nothing left of segregation laws.

Some students of government believe such a ruling would have been a great deal more far-reaching than the passage by Congress of the much debated F.E.P.C.

The court, however, adhered to its long established practice of not determining constitutional issues if other grounds for decisions exist.

IOWA ELECTION:

Brannan Plan Test

The nation watched with interest the final outcome of the primary election in Iowa. And the outcome was what seasoned political observers expected — a final campaign between Albert J. Loveland and Sen. Burke B. Hickenlooper.

There was more to it, however, than just the outcome of a primary election to determine the Democratic and Republican senatorial candidates this fall.

Loveland, former undersecretary of agriculture, campaigned against five other Democrats using the Brannan farm plan as his main weapon.

On the other hand, Senator Hickenlooper is a strong opponent of the plan. He won the Republican nomination easily over two opponents.

Thus, the fall campaign takes shape. Political observers see Loveland campaigning with the Brannan plan as the main plank in his platform, while on the other hand, Hickenlooper will take his stand against it. Political observers are looking forward to this final test on the much debated plan in the heart of America's farm belt.

Political observers also pointed out that it is almost a sure bet now that President Truman and Secretary of Agriculture Brannan will campaign in Iowa for Loveland.

ECONOMY:

Budget Cut Hinted

According to some reports, Republicans are backing a move for a new cut of the budget which the house last month trimmed $2,068,590,504.

Some senators would like a flat cut across the boards. But others want to exempt the military establishment, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and defense spending.

A means of making the cuts on the Senate floor is being sought if the trimming is not done first by the Senate appropriations committee.

Gold Attorney

BELGIUM:

Wants a King

While the rest of the world has worried about rebuilding and securing a permanent peace since World War II, Belgium has been the scene of one election after another on the question of bringing King Leopold III back from exile.

The latest of the four elections gives the Social Christian party another victory and would seem to guarantee the return of Leopold to the throne.

The vole, or field mouse, does great damage to grainfields. In years of mouse "plagues," as many as 12,000 field mice may live on a single acre, causing tremendous crop losses.

Margarine Restrictions

Federal and state laws impose such restrictions on margarine that "the poor man's butter" is not stocked by about 40 per cent of the nation's grocers.

Pickling Liquids

Stainless steel pots and pans should be used to heat pickling liquids, to avoid contamination of the pickles and discoloring utensils.

Shellac in Olden Times

More than a 100 years before the legions of Julius Caesar invaded Gaul, the natives of India began to use shellac to protect the surfaces of their temples and homes.

Discovery of Coffee

Americans, it is recorded, began drinking coffee in 1668. But coffee was originally discovered about 865 A. D., according to legend, in Arabia. Because of its exhilarating effects, it was used as a medicine and also, pulverized and mixed with fat, as a food.

Good Care Can Give Farm Tires More Wear

Eight Ways Farmers Can Use to Keep Down Cost

Tire service experts say there are eight things the average farmer can do to get the best possible return on his $200 or more investment in the tires on his vehicles. And coming just at the start of the planting season they serve as timely suggestions.

According to the B. F. Goodrich farm service department, farmers observing these tips will not only protect their tires and make them last longer, but will obtain maximum efficiency from their equipment:

1. Check air pressure twice a month, taking reading first thing in the morning when tires are cool. Never release air from tires after running tractor for long periods in hot sun. This will result in under-inflation and possible tire damage when casing cools off.

2. Do not permit grease or oil to remain on tires. This shortens the life of rubber. Wash off chemicals which accumulate after spraying with tractor.

3. When using liquid weight in rear tractor tires, do not fill tire more than three-quarters full of liquid. Maintain correct air pressure, because a slight leak under this condition will cause a much greater decrease in pressure than if the tire were 100 per cent air-filled.

4. When tractor is not in use for long periods, jack it up and cover it. Inflate tires to recommended pressure before putting tractor back in service.

5. Always use valve caps to keep out dirt and moisture and to prevent possible trouble from leaky valves.

6. Examine tires regularly for signs of damage and remove stones and other foreign objects from treads. Have cuts, bruises or other tire damage repaired as soon as they are discovered.

7. Choose correct size when purchasing tires, keeping in mind the load they must carry and the particular job for which the tractor is used.

8. Drive carefully at all times—especially on the highway—to obtain longer life from tires and to extend your own.

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

CHAPTER I

Contour maps of our country show a great hump somewhere west of the middle running irregularly north and south, and the trains of the transcontinental railroad lines going through Wyoming slow up as they approach it, stop and take on an extra engine.

For scores of miles, as they crawl over this hump and down, the trains chug through an empty wilderness of low hills, dunes, plains; green in spring and early summer, fading to taupe and fawn as the season wears on.

This is the Continental Divide, and the trainmen call it The Top of The Big Hill.

Not far from the railroad tracks one September, in the hour of intense darkness just before the dawn, a horse had gone for water to a slight depression in the ground.

Old Pete quenched his thirst, and stood mouthing the water, turning his head this way and that, moving his ears, attending to a horse's business, which is to keep himself aware every minute of all that goes on near or far.

Pete was a heavy draft horse, seventeen hands high. His coat was light bay and dappled. His hair—tail, mane, forelock, even the little skirts over his hoofs—was thick and black. He was not young and his movements were slow and deliberate.

There came the sound of a freight approaching from the east.

At the point where old Pete stood the ground sloped sharply up to the tracks a hundred feet away. The railroad made a quarter-turn here as it took its direction toward Red Buttes, the next station west.

The train came nearer. Suddenly he gave a convulsive start. Something was happening which was out of the ordinary. An enormous object had leaped off a flat car and was sliding and bounding down the slope toward him.

At this strange attack, he crouched, every leg braced, his chin drawn and ears cocked. Then he went up on hind legs, wheeled and thundered away across the plains.

At a safe distance he jammed to a stop, still snorting and trembling. The thing was not pursuing him. It had come to rest at the foot of the slope. The freight was behaving normally. The caboose had just appeared.

Pete waited until the tracks were empty, then he went slowly back, stopping once to point his ears and snort again. It was an [illegible] box. He circled it—not too closely—lifting and placing his great feet carefully. Curiosity finally overcame caution and he went up to smell it. He was still gathered, ready to run.

What was this?—a deep whinney burst from him. Instantly it was answered from inside the box. The voice was high, eager, nervous, young and very feminine. A filly.

Now came a great scrambling and banging as if the filly were struggling to get to her feet and could not. She whinnied again and again, and whatever can be told in horse language, she made known to Pete in the next few minutes.

The crate was badly damaged by the fall. One corner was sprung and from this a hoof and leg and part of the filly's haunch protruded.

There was nothing Pete could do, but he rumbled his encouragement, and if a friend standing by is any help, he gave that help.

Stallion Gives Help to Filly

When help did at last come, it announced itself by a loud, brassy neigh which rang down from the hills, causing the filly to whinny frantically in answer, to struggle until she was exhausted.

Pete knew a stallion's neigh when he heard it. And now he saw him coming, almost as large as himself, and pure white. The old horse withdrew a little and stood watching.

Then there was bedlam around the crate. The filly struggled and thrashed and whinnied her distress. The stallion neighed and grunted, smelling at her haunch, at the whole box, plunging around it. He reared up and pawed it with great cleaver-like strokes, but still it held together.

Now the stallion thundered upon the crate with his heels. It rocked and splintered. The great hoofs crashed again and again. Suddenly the side gave way, parting from the floor, and the filly rolled out. A flash of four black legs in the air, a frantic scramble, and she was on her feet—a sight which must have surprised the two horses for she was attired in a blanket coat and a hood with rimmed goggles.

She shook herself violently.

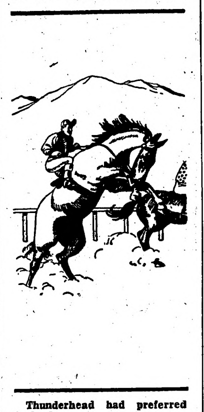
And now they made acquaintance, the stallion and the filly. They walked around each other, squealed, touched soft nostrils, nipped and nuzzled, reared and wheeled way, then, in intense excitment, did it all over again.

Suddenly the dalliance ended. The stallion seized the top of her neck in his teeth, folding his forelegs against her. Running on his hind legs he forced her to get going. She sidled away from him. Then he began his regular round-up routine, snaking around her, his nose close to the ground and his long neck undulating. He plunged on this side, then that, nipping at her heels, giving her an occasional bite in the haunches.

She fled before him. Together they swept away from the tracks, southward. Pete stood there like a great monument, wistfully looking after them.

It was about five hours later that Ken McLaughlin was riding slowly along the ridge of Section Twenty-four which runs parallel to the railroad and about a quarter-mile south of it. He was a tall, thin boy of sixteen with a sensitive face and dark blue eyes that moved ceaselessly, sweeping the land—the characteristic far-reaching look of one who had been brought up on the plains.

He rode very much at ease, now and then addressing a word to the sorrel mare, Flicka, who carried him. She responded by turning an ear backward, or altering her pace at his command.



Thunderhead had preferred to buck.

Ken was the son of Captain McLaughlin who raised sheep and polo ponies of the Goose Bar Ranch a few miles to the east. The boy had been sent by his father to the ranch of Joe Daly on an errand concerning the fifty registered Corriedale rams who served the ewes until breeding time in October, Rob McLaughlin had boarded them with Joe Daly.

Broken Crate Tells Own Story

The wind veered suddenly and the icy tang of it, as well as the unmistakable smell of snow, made Ken turn his eyes to the threatening, timbered mountain range twenty miles to the north. "Sure cooking up something," he muttered, drawing the knitted wool collar of his coat up to his ears, and Flicka put one ear back as if she agreed.

He hated the thought that summer was over and within a fortnight he and his brother, Howard, must leave for school in the East. He gave a sharp sigh—then pulled Flicka to an abrupt halt.

After a moment of silence in which, like a puppy, he put his head first on one side and then on the other, he addressed Flicka. "What in heck do you think that is?"

Flicka's attention also had been caught by the strange-looking object on the plains not far from the railroad tracks.

Flicka pricked her ears as she trotted to the crate. Ken dismounted and examined it.

It told its own story. It was a horse crate which, somehow, had got slung off a freight car. He could see where it had slid and bounced down the slope.

Never had the boy seen such a deluxe affair. He crawled into it and saw that it was highly padded, and that, sewn into the padding near the front was a card with the name and the picture of the filly.

"Crown Jewel." Ken read the name thoughtfully aloud. Hear that Flicka? It's the name of the filly that was shipped in this fancy box—Crown Jewel—a three-year-old, it says."

The picture showed the filly's face and head, her expression of almost comical interest, the alert, forward-tilted ears, the narrow, curved lines of her face, the large white diamond between her eyes with a pear-shaped pendant hanging from the lowest point.

Ken placed his finger on this mark. "That's where she got her name." He was about to tear the card loose and appropriate it. But why not take the whole crate?—he could drag it home and fix it up. "How'd you like to have a ride in this someday, Flicka?"

He got out of it and continued his examination. All around were the hoofprints of horses.

Studying the tracks, he saw that there had been three horses there. A small, dainty, rounded hoof, a larger one, and a third, still larger. Ken poked at it with his foot. "Big as a bucket," he muttered. "Could be Pete's. He's got the biggest hoof I ever saw."

Pete was a range bum. No one knew where he had come from. He would work willingly for anyone who roped him in, but few had harness big enough to fit him. He wandered the plains, attaching himself to this or that band of horses for a while, and sometimes hanging around corrals and ranch houses, but for the most part he went his way alone.

TO: Mr. Beaver Greenway, Blue Moon Ranch, Idaho, U. S. A.

FROM: Lawrence Beckwith, Oak Farms, Nr. Stroud, Glos. England

"Gosh! Beaver Greenway!"

It was a magic name! It brought back to Ken recollections of the most exciting experience of his whole life, the race meet at Saginaw Falls just a year ago. His father had allowed him to enter his white stallion, Thunderhead, in Beaver Greenway's stake, the famous Free-For-All. Thunderhead had lost, just because he had preferred to act like a bronc, and buck and throw his jockey and do some fancy fence-jumping. All the same he had shown extraordinary speed. Everybody had said he had it in him to be a steeplechaser. Once again Ken felt the keen regret that had eaten at him all the past year—if only he had ridden Thunderhead himself! "Bet I'd have won . . . I could always manage him."

Buck Daly Hears Stallion Scream

When Ken reached the Daly ranch house — a one-story building of rough logs with a rickety porch—and put Flicka's nose to the stack of hay in the yard, he heard voices. Buck was home, then. Buck Daly, Joe's son, was a friend. He looked like an Indian, small and swarthy and expressionless, and he had an Indian's skills. He had taught Ken and Howard McLaughlin how to trail animals on the prairies, how to trap beaver and mink, how to poison coyotes.

A big pot of coffee had been dragged forward on the stove. It sat, usually, on the back, half-filled with old grounds that were boiled up again whenever a fresh cup was wanted.

Buck set a cracked cup and saucer before Ken and filled it.

Joe Daly, who had a long quivering face with lips turned in, and colorless red-rimmed eyes, was bubbling with news. "Say! What d'ye think Buck seen this morning!"

"Tell him, Buck," prodded his father.

Buck wiped his mouth with his hand and leaned back in his chair. "This mornin' early, I wuz up on the hill there," he made a wide gesture with one arm, "where I got my coyote bait put out. I wuz standin' fixin, the bait—rollin' the pizen into the balls of lard, w'en I heerd a stallion scream."

"A stallion!" Ken was interested. Except for Banner, his father's purebred stud, there were no stallion that he knew of in the neighborhood.

Ken interrupted excitedly. "I saw it too! On the way over—I was going to tell you about it! A bashed-up horse crate!"

"It waan't bashed up w'en I fust seen it. The stallion did the bashing. He wuz goin' round and round it and they wuz another hoss watchin' him—a big feller—looked like Pete. All of a sudden the stud turns hisself aroun' and kicks hell outer the crate. It opens up and out jumps another hoss, all dressed up in a blanket and they runs away together, and after a while Pete follows 'em slow like."

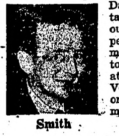
Let's save Minnesota's golden calf!

A CANDID COMMENT on a much-discussed Minnesota issue appeared recently in the Chaska Herald, David H. Smith, editor. "Minnesota's high-grade iron ore is running out," he said, "and the terrific expenditures by mining companies to mine the lower-grade taconite will, to a large extent, depend on the tax attitude of the state. New fields in Venezuela and strikes of high-grade ore in Canada can well butcher the mineral golden calf of Minnesota."



Smith

TRUE ENOUGH, Mr. Smith: But it's equally true that nothing need happen to Minnesota's "golden calf" if those who benefit from the iron ore industry take steps soon to assure it a long life.

Who does benefit from this great industry?—

Minnesota farmers benefit—the thousands of iron ore workers eat their way through countless acres of corn, wheat, milk and meat.

Minnesota workingmen benefit—not only the 15,000 directly employed in mining, but the many thousands more in related industries.

Minnesota businessmen benefit—the $45 million annually paid out in iron ore wages finds its way into cash registers from International Falls to Albert Lea, from Fergus Falls to Stillwater.

Minnesota taxpayers certainly benefit—this one industry puts some $25 million a year into state and local tax offices.

In short, every Minnesotan is a sort of partner of Minnesota's iron ore industry. And so everyone has a personal interest in seeing that it gets fair treatment.

What does that mean? It means the same kind of treatment other state industries get. It means the same sort of tax fairness—instead of unreasonable demands for still more discriminatory taxation.

As Mr. Smith says, less top-grade ore is available. Up to $500 million should be invested soon in new plants to process low-grade and taconite ores. Minnesota's ore producers want to put up this money—provided Minnesotans, through reasonable iron ore taxes, give them a chance to compete with foreign iron ore.

Will they get this chance?

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

Otter Tales

By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

A monthly column of news and information published by Otter Tail Power Company, Fergus Falls, Minnesota

Everywhere I went last month, all I saw was water and more water, raging through helpless towns, flooding fine homes, schools, churches, business places, making lakes of fertile fields.

In facing the great dangers and misfortunes of the flood, the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota and their neighbors in Manitoba showed a hardy pioneer spirit. Hundreds of instances of real heroism and Christian neighborliness were recorded.

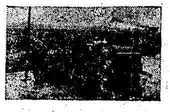
I had my troubles, too, but they were pretty small compared with what some of you folks suffered. Here are a couple of pictures that may interest you – one shows flood waters swirling around an Otter Tail Power Company sub-station at Christine, North Dakota; the other shows an Otter Tail crew digging pole holes in a flooded area.

I took my big licking earlier. From March 6 through May 5 I fought SIX sleet storms Every one was rough – but the March 6 storm, which took 75,000 man hours to restore service, was the worst. Some of the repairmen on that job put in as many as 54 hours at a stretch without rest!

That was when the Otter Tail Power Company had to get special permission from the highway departments of North and South Dakota and Minnesota to operate three gigantic "semi" trucks whose weight exceeded road limits. These trucks, built to carry half a carload of cargo each, rushed 1400 poles into the emergency area.

Repairing the damage caused by these six storms cost the Otter Tail Power Company $250,000 . . . a quarter of a million dollars! The cheerful part of the picture is the way employees, customers, "ham" radio operators and hundreds of others helped us out during those dark days.

Speaking of water, sleet and snow reminds me of a couple of tips I wanted to pass along to you . . . one of them is about off-peak water heating. You know I'm available to heat your water for you at very low cost during off-peak hours, and the other is about the job I can do for you running your home-freezer for a few pennies a week. It's pretty well known that these new freezers, properly used, will pay for themselves in time.



Well, you can't control sleet storms – and it's hard to stop floods. But, we can do something about stopping automobile accidents. This summer, let every driver do HIS part to help prevent highway tragedy. We've all had enough trouble!

—WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS—

J. Edgar Hoover Says Potential Fifth Column of 540,000 in U.S.; Wheat Crop to Miss Billion Mark

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

FIFTH COLUMN:
540,000 in U. S.

Of all the men in high government security posts, J. Edgar Hoover, director of the F.B.I., possibly commands more respect than any other. For that reason, his statement that the Communists have a potential fifth column of 540,000 people in the United States, made public some four months after he testified before a senate committee, gave Red conscious Americans a shock.

He was explicit on two points: (1) Communists are seeking American secrets with every trick and means at their disposal; (2) Subversive Communists are more active now than the Nazis and Fascists ever were during World War II.

The "orbit of Communist control," he said, has increased from one seventh of the world's population in 1917 to one third of the world's population today.

"The intensification of communism and underground activity in the United States has increased proportionately. If we are to preserve our internal security in times of emergency, it is incumbent that the identities of those who work against the peace and security of America be established."

The F.B.I. chief revealed that native-born Communists and sympathizers are after information on atomic research, radar, jet propulsion, coastal maps, military airports, biological warfare, and industrial resources.

His agency is handicapped in dealing with them because present espionage laws are intended mainly for aliens.

Hoover also reported, "To counteract the F.B.I.'s penetration of the Communist party, its leaders have established a far-reaching and vigorous loyalty program of its own, calling for establishment of investigating committees in each state and a thorough investigation of each member of the part as to personal history, activities, associations, contacts, and length of membership."

SENATOR TAFT:
War if Necessary

Senator Robert Taft of Ohio, the Republican policy chieftain who has as good a chance as any for the GOP presidential nomination in 1952, has issued a frank and complete, if somewhat startling, one-package statement on U.S. foreign policy.

The main points: (1) The United States should go to war if Russia moves into western Europe; (2) He doubts there ever can be a complete bipartisan foreign policy to cover all areas of the world.

The senator, however, did not entirely abandon the music of isolationism with which he has often been associated. He added that he believed the U.S. can contribute most to meeting the challenge (of Russia) if it maintains "a free hand" and avoids any committments, such as arms aid, now or "land-mass fighting in Europe" if fighting breaks out.

On the bipartisan foreign policy problem, Taft was not jumping completely to either side of the fence. He wanted it understood he believed a bipartisan policy could be achieved on "specific projects" when there is advance consultation with "elected Republicans in congress."

He was critical of two recent developments, particularly the "balanced collective forces" concept agreed upon by the Atlantic pact foreign minister in London, and the $1,222,500,000 second-installment arms-aid program. He said the building up of European forces might incite Russia to attack on grounds that it constituted "aggressive action."

NEW CAMERA:
26 Miles in Picture

The Air Force has announced development of a camera that will take 26 miles of picture from 10,000 feet. The picture can be taken in two seconds.

The air force said the camera tests to determine its value in reconnaissance. Whether it will be installed in new aircraft was not disclosed.

The distance can be increased by a corresponding elevation of the plane, the air force reported.

INVASION:
Red Youths Threaten

Ever since the gigantic Red youth rally in Soviet Germany it has been apparent to observers that the Communists were not satisfied at all with the results of that rally.

Now East Germany threatened to send its blueshirted Communist youths marching into West Germany. And western leaders warned they would "shoot if necessary" to keep them out.

Jailed

WHEAT CROP:
Miss Billion Mark

For the first time in seven years, the nation's farmers will fail to harvest a billion-bushel wheat crop this year, the agriculture department has predicted.

This means, the government forecasters said, the income of wheat farmers will be down some $400,000,000.

The government predicts a harvest of 944,514,000 bushels as the result of voluntary reductions in plantings under the government's acreage allotment program and from bad weather and insects.

The record crop was harvested in 1947 and amounted to 1,367,186,000 bushels. Last year 1,146,000,000 bushels were harvested. The forecast, incidentally, is well under the 10 year average of 1,032,000,000 bushels.

Observers pointed out it means the government may have to dip into its big price support wheat surplus to meet the combined domestic and export needs in the year ahead. The government now has approximately $4,000,000,000 invested in farm surpluses.

The agriculture department said prospects for the corn crop now generally are favorable. Plantings are expected to be smaller than a year ago because of the acreage allotment program.

The report forecast an oat crop of 1,380,000,000 bushels, four percent more than last year. Rye production forecast at 22,400,000 bushels, would be 20 percent larger than last year but still smaller than average.

DISARMAMENT:
U. S. Just Talking

Sixteen outstanding scientists, educators, and clergymen have issued a five-point program calling for total disarmament and accusing the United States of just paying lip service to disarmament while actually discouraging such a step.

The five points:

1. An immediate halt to atomic bomb production, with stockpiles to be taken over by the U. N. pending further negotiations.
2. Acceptance of the Soviet proposal for national—rather than international—atomic ownership, under an agreement blocking large-scale production.
3. Acceptance of the American proposal for international inspection of atomic resources and production.
4. A compromise in the U. S.-Soviet disagreement over whether atomic stockpiles should be destroyed before or after international controls go into effect.
5. Abolition of all armies and conventional armaments at the same time atomic weapons are destroyed.

The report was signed by Albert Einstein and novelist Louis Bromfield among others, and said in part:

"Officially appointed representatives to the UN tell the world that the U. S. wants disarmament and only Russia stands in the way. Yet other American officials do what they can do to discourage disarmament.

Most observers agreed the program proposed was idealistic, but hardly practical in the light of world events.

10 Million to 1

While much of the nation was reading about methods to curb gambling, a story from Las Vegas, Nev., reported a gambler made 28 passes at the dice table, something that happens once in 10,000,000 times.

The gambling casino said it lost $150,000 and the gambler, who won only $750, could have taken $268,435,456 had he let his bets accumulate.

CONSUMERS:
Buy More Heavily

The commerce department has announced consumer incomes, the mainspring of retail buying, rolled up to $212,800 million a year rate during April.

The April showing constituted a $800 million annual-rate gain over March and was the second consecutive monthly increase.

The gain "reflected an expansion in payrolls that was largely offset by declines in proprietors' income and transfer payments," the department said.

The decline in proprietor's income occurred chiefly in farm income as livestock marketing receipts declined in a season when they normally rise.

"The net income of farm operations for the first four months of 1950 was about one-fifth less than in the same period last year," the department said.

"The rise stemmed primarily from increased activity in the durable goods and manufacturing industries.

Higher employment and a longer work week in factories producing transportation equipment, machinery, and other fabricated metal products were mainly responsible for the advance of total wages in durable-goods manufacturing."

POTATOES:
Shootin' Bug Dust

Now it can be told. A hundred million pounds of surplus American potatoes have been sent into Soviet Germany to feed victims of the potato bug fantasy.

Recently the Soviet controlled radio and press went into a song and dance about American planes dropping potato bugs in the Soviet zone. The Communist propaganda said the United States sewed insects to blight the east German crop, to test out germ warfare, and sell capitalistic bug poison.

American officials called the charges ridiculous and said the Communists apparently were trying to condition the people for crop failure. The continued broadcast by the Communists on the potato bug theme and the silence maintained over the shipment of unbranded American potatoes were looked on as evidence of a campaign to cover up production failures.

The potatoes were shipped by a New York broker to a Swiss firm in Hamburg. Another deal was reported underway to ship 18,000 tons to Frankfurt in western Germany.

In both cases, state department officials suspected that the potatoes were going to the Communists.

RENT CONTROL:
Senate Extends

With what observers called an eye for the November elections, the senate passed, 36 to 28, a 6-month extension of rent control. The law is due to expire June 30.

Many of the Democrats who voted for extension did so frankly in response to an appeal made in party caucus by majority leader Scott Lucas. He told his colleagues his chances to defeat his Republican opponent in Illinois, Everett Dirkson, hung on Democratic support for rent control.

The following day the house voted 202 to 163 to extend the rent control measure. The house measure, however, would extend rent control seven months.

Now the two chambers must appoint a committee to iron out the length of extension before the bill can be sent to President Truman.

Like the senate bill, the house measure provides that when extended federal law again runs out —on December 31, 1950, or January 31, 1951, depending on which version is adopted—the governing bodies of municipalities can vote an additional extension until June 30, 1951.

Primary Winner

James Roosevelt gives out with the famed Roosevelt smile after winning the Democratic nomination for governor of California. He will meet Governor Earl Warren, Republican nominee, in November.

REMINGTON:
Resigns Post

William W. Remington, commerce department employee, who with Michael Lee, another $10,000 a year man in the department, were handed a "quit or be fired" order last May, has resigned his post.

Remington is under indictment for perjury. He is accused of lying when he denied ever being a Communist. Lee has refused to resign until the loyalty board has ruled on his patriotism.

Avoid Brooder Fires

Check over the heating facilities and electric equipment in the brooder houses for any defects which might result in fires. So-called accidental fires often could have been prevented by making proper repairs long before the fire broke out.

Early Railroad

The Erie railroad, completed from the Hudson river to Lake Erie in 1851, was the first road to reach "western waters."

Turpentine

Turpentine, used so widely in connection with paints and painting, is obtained from the oleoresion of the pine tree. One type, gum turpentine, comes from the living trees. Another, wood turpentine, is obtained from pine stumps and pine wood.

"Second-Growth"

West coast watersheds, covered with young growing forests which come in after logging, retain water longer than land covered with scattered old trees.

Prize Livestock

Livestock owners bringing their animals home after competition in state and county fairs are advised to keep them apart from home herds for 30 days—just in case they may have picked up a contagious disease that is slow in showing up. The American Veterinary Medical association says there is always a chance that show stock may be exposed to infection in transit or while on the fair grounds, yet it may take three weeks before signs of illness become apparent. In the meantime, quarantining them protects the home herd from exposure.

Night Driving

The fact that three out of every five fatal accidents occur at night (with only 30 per cent of the driving occuring between dusk and dawn), indicates that darkness produces a new and dangerous set of driving conditions calling for less speed and more caution.

Ever try to whittle a stick into a pencil? Or smooth a piece of graphite down to writing size? Why bother, you say, when you can buy pencils so cheap? And yet, it takes a small fortune in equipment plus plenty of technical knowledge, to manufacture pencils on a large enough scale so you can buy them at a dime apiece!
Quantity is the secret of LOW COST
The same is true of electricity. The savings of thousands of people have been required, invested in the ownership of America's electric companies, to buy the equipment needed for mass-producing low-cost electricity. Remember . . . the larger the over all production, the lower the per kilowatt cost.
Your electric company -- a development of free enterprise through private initiative -- is your best source of low-cost electricity.

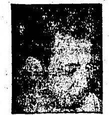
"How much can a taxpayer stand?"
THIS QUESTION CAME UP in a plain-talking editorial recently printed in the Fairmont Daily Sentinel, Uno Nelson, editor. "The state," he wrote, "has always been notorious in its tax attitude toward the iron ore industry, which last year paid over $27,000,000 in state and local taxes. This industry wants to stay in Minnesota, but is facing a discouraging future with the continual menace of a tremendous tax burden . . . We can stand only so much, and the same applies to the iron mines."



Nelson

AS ANOTHER MINNESOTA TAXPAYER, you might like to know just how much the state's iron ore industry is currently "standing." You might like to know—
—that for every one of its 15,000 employees, the industry pays $1,800 a year in Minnesota state and local taxes;
—that it pays occupation and royalty taxes at a 12% rate—twice as high as the rate of the corporate income tax paid by other state industries;
—that iron ore property taxes are assessed at a rate far steeper than other Minnesota property owners pay.
Of course Minnesota's ore producers expect to pay their fair share of taxes. But perhaps you'll feel, as Mr. Nelson suggests, that this ore tax policy hardly seems fair. More than that, is it smart?
Higher taxes don't always put more tax dollars in the till. Sometimes they bring an industry to its knees—actually LOWERING tax revenue!
Excessive ore taxes may indeed work against the best interests of Minnesotans. With our high-grade ore running short, the industry is turning to low-grade and taconite ores. These must, in effect, be manufactured. The cost—in new plants, tools, materials, and added manpower—will be enormous.
Where's all this cash coming from? From the same iron ore producers who must foot all these Minnesota taxes. Would YOU put additional money in new plants in a community where there is a constant threat of unfair taxes on your present plant?
Nobody can say for sure whether the iron ore industry can find enough folding money to meet BOTH its present tax bill AND its future production expenses. But plainly its chances would be vastly better if Minnesota would only treat this industry like any other industry.
Why we publish these facts
• We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
• We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
• We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
• We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that
A FAIR DEAL FOR MINNESOTA'S IRON ORE MEANS A GOOD DEAL FOR YOU

WONDERFUL NEIGHBOR

by HOMER CROY

A prodigal son of northwest Missouri, Homer Croy drove along a country road amid scenes of his youth. As he sees familiar sights, he associates them with the Kennedys—Newt, the kindest man he'd ever known; Mrs. Kennedy; their daughters, Ida and Lucy; their son, Harlan, his boyhood pal. He remembers going home from college to attend his mother's funeral. He remembers happy times, too, spent in the Kennedy sitting room. He remembers Ida's many beaus and her romantic escapades from which Newt had to rescue her—and her marriage to Clarence Duncan. Then he remembers Grandpa, who slept on a feather bed, and would not sleep on a mattress.

CHAPTER XIX

Sometimes Newt offered to carry it out and swing it up, but Grandpa wouldn't let him. No sir; he was goin' to do the job himself just like he had ever since Newt's Ma had died.

One day Grandpa glanced up at the sky; a good day to sun the bed, and yet, in a way, he dreaded it, for it was getting harder and harder to do. "I guess I'll sun my bed," he said as if it wasn't anything at all.

Newt looked at the old gentleman, who appeared to be growing more and more frail. Yet, in some mysterious way, the pioneer had amazing vitality; and unexpected strength, too.

He didn't go straight in, even though he'd made up his mind, but delayed the ordeal as long as he could, the way a person does when he has a hard job to tackle.

Finally he went in and stripped back the covers—there was his precious feather bed, the bed he had spent so much of life on, the bed he'd probably go out on.

"Well," he said. Then sat down, his bony, loose-skinned hands drooping in his lap.

He began edging the feather bed up on the footboard.

How ancient it looked. It was a kind of picture book of the years.

He got the feather bed up on his old humped back and edged the bed through the door. It was heavier than it had ever been before. It hung over him like a giant saddle-bag over a mare's back; one huge ball in front, another behind, bumping his legs and trying to get him down.

How far away the line seemed. His knees began to shake. Maybe he wouldn't make it. Yes, by God! he would. He wasn't goin' to be licked by no feather bed.

"Don't you want help, Pa?"

"No, I don't," he said sharply.

Perspiration came out on his leathery forehead and ran down into his eyes. Almost savagely he pawed it out.

Before he really got there, he reached out his hand for the wire; finally seized it. Could rest now.

Now came the struggle to get one of the balls over the line. Up . . . up. He felt dizzy and had to stop.

"You're sure you don't, Pa?"

He waited before answering, panting, his eyes glazed.

"Thankee, I guess I can manage."

Finally, after incredible labor, he got one end of the bed over the wire. He was panting now and so dizzy he had to steady himself by the wire. When he recovered, he began to inch the two balls even.

He set the wire in the V of the prop pole and pushed up; the bed swung high above the ground.

He sat down on his bench and rested a spell. Then came back and proudly surveyed his work. "Made it!" he called.

"I see you did, Pa. You've got amazing strength."

He basked in the compliment. "Not like I used to. Wasn't anybody on the range could do the work I could. One season I broke two hickory pitchfork handles."

Soon he was nodding. After a bit, he felt better. Then got up and went back and again admired what he had accomplished. He glanced at the bed as if to say, "Well, I licked ye!"

Going in, he sat down before the tangle of springs. The springs were held in some semblance of correct position by the lacework of cord. Some of the cord had been worn in two which let the springs tilt out of shape. As patiently as a spider mending its web, he set about putting in new strings.

The sun moved around the bed.

At last, it was time to take it in. If he brought it out, reckon he could take it back.

He sniffed. Smelt sweet.

Mrs. Kennedy's Kin Come a-Calling

He pulled out the prop pole and edged one shoulder under the bed. Finally he had it off the line and on his back, and started across the yard to his room. He had felt dizzy and swayed.

"Do you want me to help, Pa?"

He stopped, all drawn out of shape by the terrible burden. Spots jumped before his eyes.

"I could take just one end, Pa."

When he didn't answer, Newt started toward him.

"Thanks, Newton . . . least, not just yet."

He staggered across the yard, breathing heavily with great gasps. There was trouble negotiating the door, but at last he got through. Turning around so that his back was to the bed, he let the feather bed fall; then sank wearily down on it, panting.

When he felt rested, he pulled the bed into shape. How comfortable it looked. Would get a fine night's sleep.

He went out to Newt in the yard. His old eyes were shining. "Made it!" he called triumphantly.

"I see you did," said Newt. He felt almost as tired as his father.

One day a fine-looking automobile came down the road, but instead of shooting on by it turned in. Many automobiles were now upon the highways; but times had changed. Horses which once had snorted and trembled, now merely pitched their ears and showed the whites of their eyes.

It not only turned in, but gave a honk. If these were strangers in trouble they would hardly honk so imperiously.

Once lazy Nodaway Indians had shuffled along this road; later gypsies had come along it; now tourists were rattling by. It didn't seem much of an improvement.

Four persons got out. Not only got out but started across the croquet ground to the house. Sometimes people got out and gazed at us as if we were Bushmen and indicated we were quaint. But we got even when the time came to charge.

"It must be nice to live in the city," she said.

The man had on a linen duster and had goggles over his eyes. The women had linen dusters, too; also goggles.

As they came straggling across the yard, Grandpa sat looking at them as if he wished this were the old days and he had a gun across his knees.

The Kennedys, by now, were all on the porch, staring as hard as they could.

"Don't you know us?" called the man.

"No, but we'd like to," said Newt. That was taking a chance.

And now all of them, as if by a plan, raised their goggles. "It's Jim and Myra!" said the man.

And so it was. Jim Wallace was a brother of Mrs. Kennedy's and Myra was his wife; the other two were their children.

Newt Tells Why He Likes Farming

"Uncle Jim," as he was called, was a legendary figure. He had gone to the city and got rich. He seemed to travel a great deal and, every now and then, sent a picture postcard from some faroff place. The Brown Palace Hotel, Denver; Shaw's Garden, St. Louis; Rosebud Indian Agency, Portage des Sioux. Sometimes we longed to travel and see the exciting places of the world.

"We're driving through and we thought we'd stop in and see you."

Mrs. Kennedy was delighted to see her successful and citified brother and was full of questions. They were now living in Beatrice, Nebraska, Uncle Jim said. He described Beatrice and its tall buildings and busy streets and its canning plant, and he told about the First Homestead. It made our lives seem drab.

We wanted to ask Uncle Jim what he did, but did not quite dare. All we knew was that it was something tremendously important and that he was rich. He had fine creased trousers and fine white hands and fine square-toed shoes and a gold-filled watch with an American eagle engraved on the back; no Noble Stag for him. Also he had a gold watch chain and a fancy stone watch charm.

"Ida is married now!" said Newt proudly.

"That's nice," said Mrs. Wallace. "Who did she marry?"

"She married a farmer."

"Oh."

"He's goin' to develop into one of the best farmers around," said Newt defensively.

Mrs. Kennedy and Lucy flew about the cooking; always lots to do when company came. Lucy kept running up and down the cellar steps, bringing the finest and best of everything; must make an impression on the city visitors.

At milking time, Uncle Jim sat on the extra stool and told about the places he had been and the important people he had met.

He went around with Newt as Newt fed the hogs and the steers and the horses.

The Kennedys prided themselves on the good table they set, but as glamorous Uncle Jim told about the fine hotels he had been in and the wonderful meals he'd eaten, Newt became more and more humble. "I guess we haven't got the kind of eating you're used to, Jim, but it's substantial and fillin'."

"We've got the best eatin' there is," said Grandpa. "Nobody here lives out of tin cans."

After supper the family went into the sitting room and started the pressure lamp and, as they sat around it, Uncle Jim told about his real estate business and about the easy life he and his family led. Mrs. Kennedy listened intently, absorbed in every word. "I'd like to live in the city. Life must be much easier than on a farm," she said.

There was a moment's silence, for her earnestness and depth of feeling startled the family. Then the moment was passed over.

"I wish you'd tell about the First Homestead," said Grandpa. "I'd relish seeing it."

As the man told about the First Homestead, Grandpa followed eagerly, now and then saying, "Maybe I can make it sometime."

"Excuse me for being personal," said Uncle Jim after a time, "but doesn't life get monotonous on a farm?"

"I just never thought of it that way," said Newt.

"What pleasures do you have?"

Newt moved uneasily. "Well," he said apologetically, "we have our land; nobody can jerk that out from under us. I like to see crops grow. It's a pretty sight to walk out across a new stand of redtop."

"What's so thrilling about that?" asked Uncle Jim.

Confronted with the situation, Newt didn't have a good answer. "Meadow larks fly up. I like to hear a meadow lark go whirring off."

"I suppose it's very nice," said Uncle Jim.

"There ain't anything purtier than a new calf," allowed Newt. "His knees are so knobby and his tail switches so fast."

"That must be interesting."

"Well, yes, 'tis," said Newt. He tried desperately to think of other nice things about farming. "Also I like to chore by lantern light."

As Mrs. Wallace told about the motion-picture theaters and the stores and the big churches and the automobile rides in the evening, a dreamy, faraway expression came into Mrs. Kennedy's eyes. "It must be nice to live in the city," she said.

At breakfast the next morning, the fashionable visitors told more about life in the city. "I have a maid," said Mrs. Wallace.

Newt mustn't show he didn't know what this meant. Still he must be sociable. So he asked politely, "Did you get her from an institution?"

Newt shifted uneasily, thoroughly ashamed of his country jake ways. But he must defend himself. "It seems to me that's goin' a long ways around the barn to say what you mean."

Uncle Jim, It Seems, Has Touching Ways

"I guess we are," said Newt. "Still we get along pretty well," he added defensively.

He began to tell how well. Crops doing good, corn delivered at the boxcar sixty cents now, steady call for beef steers.

After breakfast something came out that hadn't shown itself before. Uncle Jim walked off toward the barn with Newt. But now his manner changed. "Newt, there's something I want to speak about," he said uneasily. "It just so happens I'm short of money."

"Is that so?" said Newt, thinking he meant money to get back to Beatrice.

"I want to pay you interest."

"You don't have to do that, Jim. How much do you stand in need of?"

"Eight hundred dollars."

A small fortune!

"Why," said Newt, "I never had that much at one time in my life, I suppose. Sometimes, when I've sold my corn, maybe I have it, but most of it has to move out to meet obligations. A farmer never has much piled up in the bank at one time."

"Do you expect to sell anything soon?"

"Not right immediately, Jim. I have some two-year-olds but I want to hold them a little longer."

Now that he had been turned down, Uncle Jim made light of it, as if the money were a matter of little consequence. "Well, I just thought maybe you'd like to pick up some easy mazooma, so thought I'd give you the first whack at it."

Costly Projects

AS EVIDENCE of the increasing extension of government activities and their ever-increasing annual costs, Sen. John L. McClennan, Democrat, Arkansas, chairman of the senate committee on expenditure of the executive departments of the federal government, presented to members of the senate a detailed list of the various projects the President has asked congress to approve which congress has, or is now, considering.

He gave figures such legislation would call for and the annual expenditures that would be needed. Such expenditures, added to what we now have, would run the cost of government up to approximately $65 billion a year.

It would mean either an unbearable increase in the tax load for the people, or a heavy deficit each year, with no opportunity for paying anything on the government indebtedness. In the end it would mean national bankruptcy and repudiation of our indebtedness.

The folowing projects for which the President has urged approval, would involve new government obligations and an ever-increasing annual cost, totaling for each year more than 18 billion dollars to be added to the present expenditures of the government.

Among the items presented to the members of the senate were.

National commission against discrimination in employment. Annual cost of operation, $5,000,000-000.

Special assistance for rental and cooperative housing. Annual cost, $50,000,000.

Labor extension service. Annual cost, $7,000,000.

Universal military training, Annual cost, $3,000,000,000.

Military housing and public works. Annual cost, $1,400,000.

St. Lawrence waterway. Annual cost, $500,000,000.

Technical assistance for undeveloped areas. (Point 4 Program). Annual cost, $500,000,000.

Farm parity program (Brannan plan). Annual cost, $6,000,000,000.

Incentive payments for development of minerals. Annual cost, $70,000,000.

That staggering total of more than 18 billion dollars would be in addition to our present costs of big government. Add just that much more to our annual deficits, and still they do not represent anything like all of the President's plans for spending. His proposals for the further development of electrical power and the conservation of resources, such as the Missouri valley project, would add other billions to the annual expenditures.

But we cannot rightfully condemn only the President for growth of government or its ever expanding expense. He can add nothing to government functions or expend any money not provided by congressional appropriation. He can only recommend.

It is those we send to Washington, our senators, and representatives from our congressional districts, who provide the money and assess our taxes. We should know how they vote on these projects that represent more government and more expenses.

If they are voting for these ever growing expenditures, then we should use our votes to name new senators and representatives who will give first consideration to the people they represent. To stop the wild spending, the ever-increasing size of government we need more people in the congress of the type of Senator Byrd of Virginia and Senator McClennan of Arkansas.

Senator McClennan certainly demonstrated that his statement of a government costing 65 billion dollars a year was not merely a wild guess. He delivered the evidence to the members of the senate.

It was not until after the turn of the present century that America experienced its first billion-dollar congress, and what a howl to "turn the spenders out" that congress did create! The Democratic party made that its battle cry.

—*—

But a few years ago, all new automobiles that came off the assembly lines were a brilliant shiny black. It had to be black to be considered new. To-day the automobile parade contains every color of the spectrum, with the black ones in the minority. The colors add to the picture sequences of the auto parade.

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

Thunderhead, magnificent white stallion owned by young Ken McLaughlin, has been banished to the Wyoming hills. Crown Jewel, an expensive filly has been shipped to Idaho rancher Beaver Greenway, but en route her crate falls off the train and she is freed by Thunderhead who drives her before him into the mountains. Old Pete, a huge horse, is a range bum and he is on hand when Thunderhead bashes in the crate bearing Crown Jewel. He follows the stallion and the filly into the hills, keeping discretely in the rear, as Thunderhead will brook no interference in his affairs. Crown Jewel senses that Pete is a friend.

CHAPTER II

Buck tilted his chair back, reached to the stove for the coffee-pot and refilled his cup.

"Holy Cats! Then the filly was actually in the crate while it was rolling down the hill!"

"Sure wuz," said Buck, going at the beans again. "But wait—I ain't told ye the best of it yet."

"Tell him, Buck, tell him!" chortled Joe.

Buck finished the pile of beans on his plate, then glanced up, his small black eyes expressionless. "Waal—here's the joker. Who d'ye think the stallion wuz?"

"Who?"

"Your stallion, Thunderhead."

It was a shock to Ken, for Buck said it with certainty. A second later, Ken shook his head. "No it wasn't, Buck — it couldn't have been."

Buck took a piece of bread, made a mop of it and swabbed his plate.

"Why not?"

"Because Thunderhead isn't anywhere near here."

"That's wot I tole Buck," put in Joe "He's up in that there valley in the Buckhorn Mountains, ain't he? What d'ye call it?"

"The Valley of the Eagles," said Ken and he said it with pride, for it was he who had first discovered the valley and given it its name.

"Yep, he's up there and he can't get out and I saw him there not so very long ago."

"W'en?" asked Buck.

"I went up there when I got home from school in June—the last week it was, I guess."

Joe looked anxiously at Buck to see what he made of that. Buck shook his head. "That's quite a spell back, Ken. Thunderhead might have got out since then."

"He wouldn't leave his mares, Buck—you know that."

"That's right." Buck puzzled over this. "How many mares did he have?"

"About twenty," said Ken.

"Mebbe he come out to git some more. He wuz stealin' a mare w'en I seen him this mornin'. Mebbe he's been out all summer, rampagin' around, stealin' mares like that old-timer, the Albino, uster—the mustang he's a throwback to."

"Couldn't he leave it ef he tuk a notion to?"

"Not at the near end of it where I dynamited the only passage that leads into it."

"Ken," said Joe, "I never could figger why in tarnation ye done a thing like that."

Ken Defends His Thunderhead's Deeds

Ken, always ready to talk about the exploits of his wonder horse, explained. "You see, he'd had that fight with the Albino up in that valley, and he'd killed him. And then he'd taken his mares and lived with them like a range stallion for a while. He wasn't just a baby colt any more. If we'd brought him home, and put him out on pasture with our other horses, what would he have done to Banner?"

There was silence in the dark little kitchen for awhile. Every man there knew what would have happened to Banner; and it wasn't good to think of.

"I reckon ef Thunderhead did anything to Banner yer Dad would jess take his big Express rifle an' put a bullet through his head," said Joe.

"He sure would."

"I niver seen a man love a hoss the way yer father loves that red stallion of his'n."

"You c'd have gelded Thunderhead, Ken," Buck said, "Then he'd be safe."

Ken's mouth tightened. "I don't want him gelded—ever. It might kill him—it often does."

"Aw, Kennie—on'y now an' then," said Joe.

Ken's voice rose. This issue of whether or not Thunderhead should be gelded was one which had come up between him and his father over and over again. So far, luck had been with him. "Look here!" he shouted. "I saw that fight between Thunderhead and the Albino! Those two horses stood up on their hind legs and screamed at each other like prehistoric monsters! And then Thunderhead killed the Albino! Could he have done that if he had been gelded?"

Considerably overawed by Ken's large words and flashing eyes as well as by the picture he evoked, his listeners made no answer. Then Buck returned to the point. "Couldn't Thunderhead have left the valley at the other end, even ef he couldn't git out where you blasted the path shut?"

Ken calmed down. "Oh, sure! Down at the far end there are a lot of gorges and ravines he could get out of, if he wanted to, but why would he? He had everything he needed there—food, water, shelter. And what would he do with all the mares and colts?"

Buck Insists He Saw Thunderhead

Buck thought this over, drawing the jam pot to him and taking several big spoonfuls.

"Must have been some other horse you saw," said Ken.

He mounted Flicka and turned her south.

"Ain't you goin' to take a look at yer rams?" asked Joe.

"Oh, gosh! Sure! That's what I came over to see you about! I almost forgot!"

While Buck made the few swift gestures which passed for dish-washing in the Daly household, Ken and Joe walked out around the house, past the barn and the pig-sties and corrals to the quarter-mile of good pasture land which Joe had fenced in with three-foot hog wire. They leaned against the gate.

The handsome Corriedales were grazing quietly, scattered over the pasture. Ken's eyes dwelt on the symmetrical, curving horns, rising from the thick curly wool. They reminded him of something he had seen once in the Valley of the Eagles when he had gone there to look for Thunderhead—a fight between two Rocky Mountain horned sheep on a ledge on the mountainside. One had killed the other and shoved it off the ledge. Eagles had plummeted down into the forest, had torn the dead ram to pieces and carried huge chunks of it to their greedy eaglets in the eyrie.

"I bet they get into some big fights," he said.

"Sure. Ever' week, about, I hears them big BOOMS! An' I have to go out with a club an' break it up."

"What I came over for," said Ken, "was to tell you, Dad wants them to have increased feeding from now on until breeding time."

"Cotton cake?"

"Yes. He's ordered five tons. When it comes, Gus'll bring it over in the truck. He wants you to give them a sack a day."

Buck halted.

"You don't really think that was Thunderhead, do you?"

Buck ruminated for quite a while before he answered. "Mebbe not, Ken." He started off again. A little farther on he checked his horse and called back, "But he wuz white. An' he wuz a stallion."

Ken cantered homeward in so great a state of confusion that he forgot all about his dinner in spite of the pangs that were gnawing his stomach.

One moment he utterly disbelieved Buck's surmise; the next he was in agony for fear it was true.

There had been a constant conflict between himself and his father ever since the horse had been born, four years ago. Rob McLaughlin insisted that the colt being a throwback, he would always be uncontrollable, and, unless gelded, a menace to Banner and no use as a saddle horse.

Ken's action in putting Thunderhead in the valley to take the place of the stallion, the Albino, whom Thunderhead had killed, and then shutting him in there with the mares, had seemed to solve the problem.

But if Thunderhead had left the valley! If he were out!

Each time this thought came, there came with it an anguishing physical pang. He began to look desperately around for food. Tie Siding was not far away. He had meant, in any case, to pick up the mail before he went home.

He searched in his pockets for money. A dime in one—three pennies and a two-bit piece in another. Slightly cheered by this wealth, he altered his direction and soon was seated at the counter of the little short-order house in Tie Siding, wolfing sandwiches.

Suddenly Ken slid down from his high stool and ran to open the door. "Howard!" he yelled.

The tall fellow who was just getting out of the Goose Bar station wagon turned. "Hi, Ken! Why didn't you come home for lunch?"

"Didn't get through at Daly's," said Ken. "I'm having a sandwich here, now. Come on in. Got something to tell you."

"I'll get the mail first," said Howard, going toward the Post Office.

Howard McLaughlin, at eighteen, was two inches taller than his father. He had a merry, gibing face and was considered handsome. His black hair was parted in the exact center, his clear, light blue eyes had an inscrutable expression, his thin red mouth went down at one corner.

"Hurry up," said Ken nervously. But his brother was looking through the mail. There was a letter for him, addressed in large feminine handwriting. He shoved the rest of the mail into his pockets and opened and began to read his own as he sipped his coffee.

Howard Promises To Keep Secret

Ken paid his check, went out and stood waiting by the station wagon. This behavior brought Howard out in a hurry—Ken was certainly being mysterious about something.

The boys got into the front seat and Ken poured out all he had seen and heard that morning.

Howard's eyes lighted with interest. "Gosh!" he exclaimed. "A filly of Beaver Greenway's! It sure looks like your colt has got out of that valley and you're in for it, Ken."

"Got any money?" asked Ken.

"What you want it for?"

"Want to buy some more sandwiches. I'm going up to the valley to see if he's still there or not."

"Without going home and telling Dad? You'll get hell."

"I'm going to get hell anyway—and plenty of it. Look, Howard, I've got to go. But don't tell Dad anything about it—about what Buck saw—about the crate or anything."

"Why not? He's going to know, isn't he?"

"But Howard, he'll get all-stirred up about Thunderhead. And maybe it wasn't Thunderhead after all. I don't see how it could have been.

"What'll I tell him?"

The corral of the Goose Bar stables was full of men and horses. Rob McLaughlin, called Captain because he was a West Point graduate and, if he weren't a captain, at least looked the part, had done his haying late, this year. The hay crew had just been dismissed. Today, Tim and Wink, the two young hired men, had been working on the stacks, shaping them, binding them down with long wires upon the ends of which were fastened railroad ties as weights. They were now unharnessing Big Joe and Tommy from the light wagon which had carried their tools.

Ross Buckley, broncobuster and wrangler, a bow-legged wisp of a man in faded, skin-tight bluejeans, was leaning against the fence, rolling himself a cigarette before he rubbed down Senator. Senator was one of six horses who were being prepared for sale to the Army, and Ross Buckley had been hired by Rob to do the job.

Rob McLaughlin was talking with Gus, the Swede, who was his foreman. Rob had just returned from a long ride and stood in worn and wrinkled leather boots that were mellowed to a rich, old oak shade He was burned a rich bronze up to the line where his wide felt hat gripped his brow. Deep under his black eyebrows were points of blue, keen and challenging. Howard and Ken often found it difficult to meet their father's eyes.

Rob and Gus were examining the weather, planning the next day's work.

"Guide weather fur branding," said Gus.

"Some time this week," said Rob, "Colonel Dickenson, the Army Remount Officer, is coming out to look over the geldings. Keep them all pretty close to the corral."

SPORTSMAN'S HORIZON

By JIM RHODY

Mighty Mite

The repulsive looking fellow in the accompanying drawing is a chigger, or technically, a mite—member of the family of mites, spiders, ticks and scorpions—which causes sportsmen in the south and midwest more discomfort than another insect or animal. He is a juvenile delinquent, a newly-hatched baby or larval stage of the common, bright red, spider-like mite often seen in early spring in gardens and fields.

The best way to get "loaded" with chiggers is to sit or lie down in areas where they abound. But, one can usually gets sufficiently infested while walking along a stream looking for that good bass hole.

But getting down to the purpose of this item, to protect yourself when out on a camping trip this summer, treat the ankles, calves, stockings, and trouser legs with a recommended insect repellent or a few pinches of ordinary sulphur. This is, however, only temporary protection. After a fishing trip a shower or bath with soap and water will help reduce severity of attack.

A number of household items will help relieve chigger bites, including ammonia, a weak solution of lysol, rubbing alcohol, camphor, vaseline, chloroform, iodine, or fingernail polish. These materials will also kill the chigger.

A Noble Try

Back in 1879 Missouri's first fish commission made a noble experiment in restocking the state's streams with fish. Although it failed, the experiment has been called the first sincere attempt to restock midwest streams.

The commission's first act was to establish a fish hatchery where speckled trout and such exotic species as California salmon, Atlantic white shad and German carp were hatched.

The California salmon and white shad are migratory species which live in the ocean except during early spring when they move up freash-water rivers and streams to spawn. It was believed that these species, released in Missouri, would go to the Gulf then return each spring to spawn.

Some 200,000 salmon fry were released in several Ozark streams by the commission. Five years after the first release, the commissioners wrote: "We have placed California salmon in our waters for five successive years. No adult salmon has yet been captured on his return into our streams. There is no reason yet to be discouraged as those fish cannot reach maturity in less time."

Time moved on and as yet no one has reported catching a matured salmon. But it was a noble try.

Perhaps the most colorful of the early operations was the rearing of German carp, such as practiced in the old countries. The commissioners had in their employ an "expert carp culturist" from Germany. Landowners were encouraged to propogate carp in ponds, and a booklet was printed explaining the art and offering hints on best methods of cooking the fish such as "carp boiled in beer" and "carp cooked in wine."

The commissioners were really sold on the idea. "We are assured," they wrote, "that the carp can be raised on the farm with as much certainty and economy as pigs and poultry."

By 1888, some 4,800 ponds had been stocked and over a half-million carp had been released in streams and public waters.

Though the carp idea went off with a bang it lacked lasting qualities. A few years later the commissioners agreed "we are of the opinion that we have fish of a better quality among our native fish in Missouri."

Regardless of their lack of success, the early commissioners did gain an insight toward the needs for protecting and restoring wildlife. It was a noble try.

Quail Population

Declining bobwhite population has caused much concern to sportsmen throughout the broad range of this popular bird. Except in a few localities, quail numbers have declined in spite of reduced bag limits and curtailed seasons.

Conservation officials report, however, the bird population will begin to increase as the soil conservation program expands. The program will increase feeding grounds and cover.

Birthday Parties

Mothers know that birthday celebrations are among the most important occasions in a child's life. However, it takes time to plan the games, favors, and other preparations that make these occasions a success. Busy homemakers can save time and work in the kitchen by depending on their neighborhood baker to furnish one of his delicious cakes for the party. A personal touch may then be added by decorating the top of the bakers' cake with a clock face, making the numbers out of contrasting frosting, and placing the hour hand of the clock so that it points at his age. Candles are unnecessary with this clock face, although most children enjoy making a wish and blowing out the flames.

Beef Sandwiches

Cool days call for treating the family to a satisfying lunch of hot roast beef sandwiches. They are easy to prepare, thrifty, and tasty too. Simply arrange cuts of hot, left-over roast beef between slices of enriched bread, and cover with gravy. Hot roast beef sandwiches are high in nutritive value so necessary to growing youngsters, and working adults. Serve these tasty hot sandwiches with crisp carrot sticks, stuffed celery hearts, cabbage slaw, or your favorite fruit salad.

Glassmaking an An Ancient Art

The history of fine glassware goes back more than 5,000 years but the processes used today are practically the same as those used that many years ago.

Hi Ya, Clarence!

"Clarence," she called. He stopped the car and looked around.

"I am not accustomed to call my chauffeurs by their first name, Clarence. What is your surname?"

"Darling, mum."

"Drive on, Clarence."

Surprise!

"Did anybody drop a roll of bills with a rubber band around them?"

"Yes, I did," said several voices in the bank lobby.

"Well, I just picked up the rubber band," said the old gentleman calmly.

From where I sit... by Joe Marsh

Maybe
This'll Wake Us Up!

Because a couple of thoughtless drivers threw a newspaper out of their car yesterday, Miss Gilbert, our school principal, nearly had a bad accident.

She was following them on the highway and the paper flattened over her windshield, so she couldn't see. In a minute her little coupe was across the line—right in the path of an oncoming trailer-truck. It missed . . . but only just!

The parties were recognized and soon as I heard about it I ran over to Sheriff Harper—demanded they be brought up on charges. But Harper says: "Hold on, Joe. Let's talk this out, over supper and a glass of beer at Andy's."

He pointed out that those men aren't criminals. Just careless, like a lot of us seem to be getting these days, judging from the trash you see along roadsides. From where I sit, this near accident may be the lesson we need to make us stop littering our roads—and start showing a little tolerant consideration for our neighbors!

—WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS—

Russia Offers Cold War 'Terms'; Dewey to Retire From Politics; F. B. I. Arrests Two in Spy Case

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

COLD WAR:
New Peace Terms

Observers are speculating over so-called cold war peace terms reportedly acceptable to the Russians which include a demand that the United States cease helping to re-arm western Europe.

It was an ironic demand because at the same time the Soviet agreed to recognize the Atlantic pact as a legitimate regional defense group under the terms of the United Nations charter.

It is this pact that pledges the western nations to mutual aid.

The Soviet also had three demands on the Far East:

(1) Elimination from the United Nations of the representatives of Generalissimo Chiang Kai Shek's government.

(2) Acceptance by the western powers of the Russian "gold ruble" as the basic currency for China's foreign trade.

(3) Soviet participation in the conclusion of a peace treaty with Japan which would guarantee the latter country what Moscow considers to be "political freedom."

In the European field, the Soviet had four rather vague offers:

(1) Unification of Germany within the framework of the Potsdam agreement.

(2) Neutralization of Germany.

(3) Withdrawal of all occupational forces from Germany.

(4) General reduction of armaments and armies, including the abandonment of conscription.

Observers did not believe the terms would be attractive enough to bring about any settlement of differences between the East and the West. Russia, as usual, wants a great deal but is vague about tangible returns.

DEWEY:
Plans to Retire

One of the most spectacular careers in modern American politics has come to a halt, at least temporarily.

Governor Thomas E. Dewey of New York has announced he will retire from politics after 20 years in public life and probably return to private law practice when his second term expires next December 31.

Dewey said in a one-sentence statement which he personally distributed to reporters, "I shall not be a candidate for re-election next fall." He renounced further personal White House ambitions last December.

As expected, his announcement raised a number of questions in the New York state political picture as well as on the national scene.

Dewey, New York's only Republican governor in the past 30 years, added, however, that he would continue an active interest in public affairs. He promised to speak out on "issues affecting the welfare of the state and nation," especially foreign affairs.

He rose to political prominence when he pyramided his fame and methodical efficiency as a racket-busting prosecutor in New York city into two terms as governor and two nominations for President.

He was defeated by President Roosevelt in 1944. In 1948, he lost to President Truman.

The governor said he had made no definite decision as to his plans, but intended to get much rest. He said there was nothing wrong with him physically that a long vacation would not cure. He is just "tired," he added.

HUNGARY:
Demands Ransom

The custom of blackmail, ransom and intrigue so often employed by the Nazis in the reign of terror over Europe, has put in a more obvious appearance under the Communists.

Hungary has demanded the ancient crown of St. Stephen as ransom for Robert A. Vogeler, imprisoned American businessman.

According to reports from Europe, Hungarian Communists have offered to swap Vogeler for the 1,000-year-old crown which is the symbol of Magyar royalty.

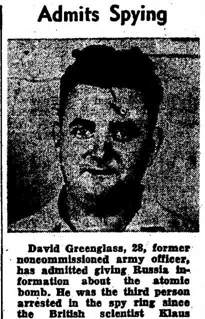
The crown was taken from Hungary by the Nazis and later found by the American troops in Germany.

CORPORATIONS:
Increased Taxes

When the election conscious house and senate began a program of tax cutting after President Truman offered his budget, he warned any reductions must be met with revenue from other sources.

Now, the house ways and means committee, obviously bidding for presidential approval of the excise-tax cut, had voted a $433,000,000 increase in the yearly tax on big corporations.

Admits Spying



David Greenglass, 28, former noncommissioned army officer, has admitted giving Russia information about the atomic bomb. He was the third person arrested in the spy ring since the British scientist Klaus Fuchs was taken into custody.

ESPIONAGE:
New Arrests Made

Since British scientist Klaus Fuchs admitted spying for Russia the F. B. I. has been closing the net around associates in the United States who passed along classified atomic information to him.

As a result two new arrests have been made. One of the accused admitted that he passed along atomic secrets from the Los Alamos, N. M., plant in 1945.

He is David Greenglass, a 28-year-old former Communist league leader who explained his act: "I felt it was gross negligence on the part of the United States not to give Russia the information about the atom bomb because she was an ally."

The other accused, Dean Slack, a 44-year-old Syracuse, N. Y., chemist, denied he knew Henry Gold, the first arrested in this country. He added he was not and never had been a Communist.

Both men are held under $100,000 bonds.

Meanwhile, a grand jury investigating Amerasia case, which has been much in the headlines recently, cleared the administration's handling of the stolen documents case, but strongly recommended the impaneling of a new grand jury to continue the investigation.

Also in connection with the case, Emmanuel S. Larsen, himself arrested and fined in the 1945 case that hinged on the theft of hundreds of diplomatic and military papers, told a senate investigating committee he regarded former navy lieutenant Andrew Roth as a "Communist, and the principal conspirator" in the stolen-documents case.

Government officials indicated that the arrest of Slack and Greenglass was only the beginning in the battle to break up what may possibly be one of the greatest spy rings in the history of this country.

COMMUNISTS:
Defeat by Ballot

Political observers were pleased with the outcome of the state election returns in the Ruhr section of Western Germany. They felt it was a defeat of the Communists by the ballot.

In the British zone the voters picked a 215-seat parliament and voted on a proposed state constitution. The returns indicated Communist strength had tumbled to a postwar low when they received only 5 per cent of the valid ballots, compared with 14 per cent in the election three years ago.

The workers, however, favored the proposed state constitution with its socialization clause:

"Large factories of the basic industries and undertakings which, because of their monopolistic position have special significance, shall be transferred to common ownership."

The specific industries were not named in the draft.

Western observers felt the elections justifiable in that they would:

1. Give the new nationalist parties, which were not even in the arena in the federal elections last August a chance to show their muscle.

2. Tell whether communism is gaining in Western Germany.

3. Test the popularity of the West German Federal Government's policies.

Rent Control

The house and senate committees considering rent control have agreed upon a six-month extension of federal controls and another six months in communities which want them.

Although both branches of congress must approve the measure, there seemed little doubt that they would do so.

Observers said the bill will be on the President's desk before June 30.

LABOR:
Degree of Unity

A degree of future unity between big labor unions appeared on the horizon as the A.F.L. and the C.I.O. worked on plans for their pending cooperation conference. The one notable exception, however, was the uninvited United Mine Workers.

UMW chief John L. Lewis was not happy at being left out of the conference. He said a conference without his union is no way to achieve labor unity.

While he was making that statement, the national labor relations board took a swat at the UMW by ruling it broke the Taft-Hartley law by a campaign of violence to organize employees of a Harlan county, Kentucky, department store.

The board ordered the union to cease assaulting, or threatening the store employees. If the union ignores the order it could eventually lead to possible jail sentences or fines for union officials.

But while the UMW struggles with its problems, there were long strides by the other union toward cooperation—if not eventual merger.

Among the developments:

1. Joseph D. Keenan, top A.F.L. political organizer addressed the C. I. O.'s political action committee. His subject was a renewed effort by the union to unite to repeal the Taft-Hartley law.

2. A cross section of American labor ranks attended a two-day meeting aimed at raising assistance for the Israeli federation of labor.

3. The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen accepted C. I. O. proposal for a committee to work together on common problems and eventually aim at consolidation.

INFLATION:
To Financial Ruin

Former President Herbert Hoover, in a speech before the U. S. Junior Chamber of Commerce convention in Chicago, has again warned that financial disaster is in prospect for the country unless the government curtails its spending policies drastically.

Unless an immediate halt is ordered on spending, Mr. Hoover predicted the undermining of an economy which he said would provide one million new jobs annually. For 17 years, he maintained, Democratic administrations had continued the spending spree.

"Financing government deficits by borrowing, if continued long enough, has only one end—inflation," the former President said. "We ourselves have already decreased the purchasing power of the dollar about 50 per cent, and we are still creeping along the road.

"The five-cent telephone call and the five-cent fare have already gone, and the five-cent bar has shrunk. A new round of inflation is now appearing in direct or indirect wage and salary increases and rising commodity prices.

"If we keep on this road, we are certain to realize the President's ideal of $4,000 a year to every family. But it will not have $4,000 purchasing power.

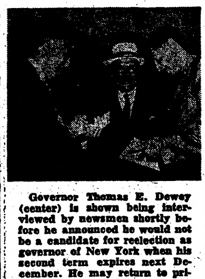
"To this question of further government borrowing to meet deficits, my answer is that it is the road to disaster for every cottage in the land."

DEFICIT:
At 3.8 Billion

The administration has predicted a $5,400,000 deficit by the end of the fiscal year June 30, but shortly before the deadline it appeared the amount would be well under the estimate.

A $773,625,000 interest payment on the national debt boosted the deficit to $3,887,529,000. The payment was made two weeks before the end of the fiscal year.

To Retire



Governor Thomas E. Dewey (center) is shown being interviewed by newsmen shortly before he announced he would not be a candidate for reelection as governor of New York when his second term expires next December. He may return to private law practice.

BRIDGES MINED:
Just in Case

Whether or not the world is face to face with another war has been in the minds of the everyday citizen almost since the final shot was fired in World War II.

Now it comes to light that the key roads and bridges in Western Germany are being prepared for quick destruction in case of a Soviet attack. Similar preparations apparently are being made in other Euro-

Beginning of Rubber

Prehistoric Indians were the first to tap the rubber tree. They made rubber shoes, bottles and coated fabrics. Columbus discovered them playing with rubber balls. It was not until 1770 that Dr. Joseph Priestly gave it the name of "rubber." He found that the gum removed pencil marks. But Europeans found rubber too sticky in hot weather and too brittle in cold. Charles Goodyear, Yankee inventor, invented the vulcanizing process in 1839. After that the rubber industry boomed. Vulcanization made possible the many rubber products we have today—tires, clothing, insulation, foam rubber.

Bye, Bye, Blackboard

It's Bye, Bye, Blackboard in the modern school room. Green chalk boards with yellow chalks take their place. The innovation is recommended by the American Optometric Association in the interest of easier seeing. Blackboards absorb too much light and cause visual distortion.

20/20 Vision

The idea that 20/20 vision is "perfect" is a fallacy, according to Dr. J. Ottis White, Louisiana optometrist. It merely means that one can see what he should see at 20 feet, but gives no indication of one's ability to see within arm's length, the distance at which most critical seeing is done, he said.

Hospital Bed

A new hospital bed that can be operated by the patient without the aid of a nurse may be a boon to nurses and patients alike. The inventors claim that the electrically and hydraulically controlled bed is foolproof—the patient cannot end up in an awkward position.

More Steel for France

Mechanization is on the way for war-weakened French steel industry. Westinghouse is building $9,800,000 worth of electrical equipment to help bolster it. Order for the equipment was placed by SOLLAC, a privately owned asso-

Prize Livestock

Livestock owners bringing their animals home after competition in state and county fairs are advised to keep them apart from home herds for 30 days—just in case they may have picked up a contagious disease that is slow in showing up. The American Veterinary Medical association says there is always a chance that show stock may be exposed to infection in transit or while on the fair grounds, yet it may take three weeks before signs of illness become apparent. In the meantime, quarantining them protects the home herd from exposure.

Greek National Costume

Forty yards of material are used in the skirt of the Greek national costume — the ballerina-like kit worn by the Army's elite corps, the Evzones. Ten yards more go into the Evzone's flowing sleeves. Embroidered vest, tasseled garters, tasseled cap, and pompons on his boots complete the fancy-dress uniform.

Confused the Germans

Comanche, a tribe of buffalo-hunting Indians who spent their early days raiding Spanish ranches, often were used in pairs during World War I to transmit telephone messages. Their language, which has never been written down, caused the German code experts a great deal of confusion.

Avoid Brooder Fires

Check over the heating facilities and electric equipment in the brooder houses for any defects which might result in fires. So-called accidental fires often could have been prevented by making proper repairs long before the fire broke out.

What Is Lava?

Geologists call the molten rock material within the earth "magma," a Greek word which may be translated as "dough." However, when this "dough" is ejected from the earth's interior by volcanic ac-

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

On a visit to the Daly ranch, Ken hears from Buck Daly that a white stallion had crashed in the crate bearing the filly and Buck poses the idea that the stallion was Thunderhead. Ken doesn't think so because, on orders of his father, Rob, Ken has Thunderhead holed up in the "valley of the eagles" wherefrom he thinks it impossible for Thunderhead to escape. But Daly insists it was Thunderhead he saw, and Ken begins to entertain a suspicion that perhaps it was Thunderhead after all. Ken has seen the broken crate and realizes the loss to Greenway will be extensive, since Crown Jewel was bought in England and shipped to the United States.

CHAPTER III

Kim, the yellow collie, lay on the grass outside the fence, panting violently, his long red tongue hanging out the side of his mouth.

Pauly, a little brown tortoise-shell cat with long topaz eyes, appeared in the stable door, and stood there with dignity, looking out into the corral. In her mouth she held a large rat, still alive, and her head was high to carry the weight.

"See that big rat!" exclaimed Wink.

"She get one yoost about every day," said Gus.

"She's got kittens," said Tim, "and she hunts rats and bunnies and gophers all day for them."

Rob looked at Gus in surprise. "What in hell are the cows doing up here?"

"It ain't our cows, Boss. Some of Johnson's cows broke tru de fence in de corner of Section Eighteen. Nine white faces and some calves. Wink and Tim found 'em and corralled 'em. Want I should tell Wink to drive 'em back?"

"No. Wink's got to milk. I'll send Ken."

"Ken ain't home yet, Boss—leastways, Flicka's not here."

"Howard then."

"There's his horse." Rob pointed to a tall black, grazing in the pasture outside the corral.

"He tuk de station wagon."

"To get the mail?"

"Yah."

Rob gave an impatient exclamation. "And now it's milking time. When those kids get off the ranch they don't ever get home!"

"Dot's kids for you," said Gus, a slow warm smile crinkling his pink face.

Rob stood a moment, thinking, —he was annoyed at the failure of the boys to show up.

He strode suddenly forward and Kim arose and ran around the corral to follow.

The cows were waiting at the gate of the pasture to be milked. Formerly, Nell had taken complete charge of the dairy. But now there was the baby, Penelope Margaret, named after Nell's mother and his own, and her care took most of Nell's time.

Rob reached the paved yard behind the kitchen door of the house. Nell would be upstairs with Penny. Soon now, she would give Penny her bath and her supper.

Nell's Condition Puzzling to Rob

At the thought of Nell, he became motionless. There was a look of puzzlement on his face. . . . Nell! How quiet she was these days. She didn't look well. She'd always had a tendency to have circles under her eyes but since Penny was born, they had been blue and transparent. Or was she worried? Dissatisfied? Had he fallen down on anything he should have done. She couldn't be unhappy now—not now—why, he had given her the piano! She had a cook! And two new bathrooms and a furnace had been installed since the new band of sheep had brought prosperity to the Goose Bar Ranch!

Rob went into the house and stood at the foot of the stairs, listening, wondering if Nell were taking a nap, but no sound reached him. He returned to the living-room and paused beside the piano, his hand caressing the polished surface. His pride in this gift to his wife was accompanied by chagrin that for so many years of her life with him she should have been without one.

He had wondered if she had missed it dreadfully. You couldn't tell. She never spoke of it.

All the greater, then, had been his happiness when he counted up the first crop of lambs from his new flocks, and realized that the time had come when he could give Nell a piano.

He had told her only that he had to go to Denver to arrange with a commission house for the sale of the lambs and that he might be gone for several days.

He had spent the time with the leading musician of Denver, a celebrated pianist, who went with him from one store to another. They sampled every second-hand grand piano of good make which was advertised for sale. The one they had picked, at last, was a reconstructed Steinway, twenty-five years old, embodying a number of advantageous features which newer makes did not have.

All this drifted through Rob's mind as he stood there stroking the piano. He reached a finger down and pressed on one of the notes, trying to hear in it the things his wife heard. At that moment there was the sound of the station wagon coming up the hill behind the house.

Rob went to the back door and threw it open.

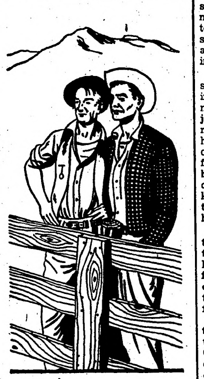
"Howard!"

"Yes, sir—here's the mail."

"Mail! You left here at one to get the mail and now it's milking time! Where's Ken?"

"Well, Dad, he's gone up to the valley to see Thunderhead."

Rob's eyes narrowed. He kept looking at Howard without speaking. Howard continued, "You see the haying's over and soon we'll be going back to school," Howard paused checking the truth of every thing he was saying, "and he was awfully keen on seeing Thunderhead again."



Rob and Gus were examining the weather, planning the next day's work.

Rob Ponders Ken's Actions

Rob continued to eye him as if waiting, but Howard looked down and said nothing.

"Did he see Daly?"

"Oh, sure! Yeah—he saw Daly and told him about feeding the rams up."

"Where did he eat?"

"At Tie Siding. I ran into him there when I went for the mail."

"Well then, he won't get back tonight—" It was more statement than question. Rob waited a moment.

When Howard merely shook his head, Rob's tone changed.

"Howard there's something I want you to do. You'll have to take your horse. A lot of Johnson's cattle broke through the fence up on the corner of Section Eighteen. They're up in the east corral, nine white-face cows and some calves. You drive them off our land, put them where they belong and mend the fence before you come back."

"Yes, sir," said Howard with alacrity, jumping out of the car.

Rob closed the door and walked toward his desk, his lips tightening in an expression that was half grim, half amused. He had some work to do on his accounts, but before he began, he gave a few moments of thought to Ken's behavior. Whenever Thunderhead was concerned, or that valley up in the Buckhorns, Ken was loco. If he had gone up there now, something was doing. Howard! Rob broke into a chuckle. Either Howard was circumbobulating and didn't care who knew it or he was making a bad job of it. Well, anyway, Howard was shielding Ken. Wait until the kid came back—

He pulled his papers toward him. After sixteen years of losing money on horses he was now making money on sheep. This meant being able to educate his children properly, employ sufficient help to train and school those horses which he intended to keep, and give Nell the comforts and luxuries he so passionately wanted her to have.

Nell's life was quiet now, not so much riding, not so much to do with her sons and husband, not with the ranch activities. And not so much activity in the house, either, for there was Pearl to do the housework and cooking; leaving Nell time to take care of Penny and to read and practice and to rest.

It was a great change for her, after having lived like a big sister with her growing boys for so long. Often she was surprised to find herself lonely. Penny was like a darling rose in her bosom, or like a thread of melody in her ear, but not yet a companion.

Nell suspected that part of her loneliness came from having a secret from Rob. It was something she was ashamed to tell. It was, merely, a premonition. When all was going so well with the family, with the ranch, the sheep, the baby girl they had wanted so passionately, could she be the one to cry, "It is all false! Trouble is coming!" No —of course not. Anyway, it was probably nonsense. She would get over it. But those dreams—always of disaster—

The dream this morning, just at dawn, had been the worst of all—a nightmare. How real! Being strangled and unable to move, or do the least thing to help herself! And suddenly being awake enough to know that she was lying there in the bed, with Rob beside her, and yet the strangling and the terror and the awful presence that was beating down upon her continuing.

It had faded and she had come fully awake, panting, perspiration on her forehead, and, still the constriction in her throat and anxious not to wake Rob, but forced by her terror to do something to break the spell, she had slipped out of bed and gone through the open door into Penny's nursery.

Nell and Rob shared the large square room over the kitchen, warm in winter, facing the Green and the morning sun. The small room adjoining, Rob's dressing-room, had now been turned over to Penny and held her white-painted furniture ornamented with little clusters of forget-me-nots and pink roses and bowknots of ribbon. There was the chiffonier in which her clothes were kept, the large table holding scales, toilet articles and bath, there were her little table and tiny chairs.

Nell had gone first to the crib. In the faint light of dawn she could see the baby, lying flat on her back, head turned sideways so that her face was in profile, both arms out on the pillow, crooked at the elbow, the closed pink hands making tiny fists.

Then she had gone to the window to look out and see how near it was to sunrise and there, down on the Green, were a man and woman dancing together. It was Pearl, of course, cutting up with a most decrepit object, shirttail flapping outside his baggy dark trousers, rolled-up sleeves showing thin, hairy arms, a battered black felt on his head. The clothes looked empty but they capered ecstatically, keeping pace with Pearl and the brisk wind which whipped her full cotton skirts about her aged legs.

Nell wondered if the man dancing on the lawn was Tom. Pearl had spoken that name with romantic tenderness. Romance? Ah . . . Romance between the capering scarecrow and maudlin Pearl . . . dancing on the Green in the windy dawn.

Presently she heard Howard's voice outside. That was Rob talking to him.

Soon after breakfast next morning, Rob, mounted on Reveille, and Howard on Jester, and Ross Buckley on Senator, were schooling their horses in the practice field below the cowbarns. These were three fine geldings, conforming to Army specifications, four years old, fifteen and a half hands high, unblemished.

A large black car appeared on the road and stopped, drawing up along the rail fence of the practice field.

Descending from the car was a tall thin man, with a genial ruddy face under a thatch of grey hair, dressed in the Westerner's compromise between town and country, the tight-fitting whipcord trousers called "Cheyenne pants," a waist-length jacket, and wide-brimmed felt hat. He limped a little, there was an accousticon in his ear and a small microphone on the breast pocket of his jacket.

Beaver Greenway Visits the Ranch

"Beaver Greenway!" yelled Rob, dismounting and going to the fence. "What brought you to this part of the world?" The two men shook hands and Rob's eyes took in the car, the English-looking fellow at the wheel with the checked cap and the look of a man who lives around horses—red face, receding chin, popeyes. Another man was getting out of the tonneau whom Rob recognized as the Cheyenne freight agent.

"Hackett!" exclaimed Rob. "Glad to see you!" Hackett advanced and shook hands.

"This is my son, Greenway, my older son—you met Ken a year ago—"

Rob motioned to Howard, who dismounted in one swift smooth step, looping the reins over his arm.

"Well," said Greenway, "I've got a tale of woe to tell, and Hackett here suggested you might be the man to help me out."

Howard looked interested and moved a step closer. But Rob said, "Well, Howard, you've got a morning's work on the plug—here, tie Reveille to the fence for me, will you?"

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Russia Offers Cold War 'Terms'; Dewey to Retire From Politics; F. B. I. Arrests Two in Spy Case

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

COLD WAR:

New Peace Terms

Observers are speculating over so-called cold war peace terms reportedly acceptable to the Russians which include a demand that the United States cease helping to re-arm western Europe.

It was an ironic demand because at the same time the Soviet agreed to recognize the Atlantic pact as a legitimate regional defense group under the terms of the United Nations charter.

It is this pact that pledges the western nations to mutual aid.

The Soviet also had three demands on the Far East:

(1) Elimination from the United Nations of the representatives of Generalissimo Chiang Kai Shek's government.

(2) Acceptance by the western powers of the Russian "gold ruble" as the basic currency for China's foreign trade.

(3) Soviet participation in the conclusion of a peace treaty with Japan which would guarantee the latter country what Moscow considers to be "political freedom."

In the European field, the Soviet had four rather vague offers:

(1) Unification of Germany within the framework of the Potsdam agreement.

(2) Neutralization of Germany.

(3) Withdrawal of all occupational forces from Germany.

(4) General reduction of armaments and armies, including the abandonment of conscription.

Observers did not believe the terms would be attractive enough to bring about any settlement of differences between the East and the West. Russia, as usual, wants a great deal but is vague about tangible returns.

DEWEY:

Plans to Retire

One of the most spectacular careers in modern American politics has come to a halt, at least temporarily.

Governor Thomas E. Dewey of New York has announced he will retire from politics after 20 years in public life and probably return to private law practice when his second term expires next December 31.

Dewey said in a one-sentence statement which he personally distributed to reporters, "I shall not be a candidate for re-election next fall." He renounced further personal White House ambitions last December.

As expected, his announcement raised a number of questions in the New York state political picture as well as on the national scene.

Dewey, New York's only Republican governor in the past 30 years, added, however, that he would continue an active interest in public affairs. He promised to speak out on "issues affecting the welfare of the state and nation," especially foreign affairs.

He rose to political prominence when he pyramided his fame and methodical efficiency as a racket-busting prosecutor in New York city into two terms as governor and two nominations for President. He was defeated by President Roosevelt in 1944. In 1948, he lost to President Truman.

The governor said he had made no definite decision as to his plans, but intended to get much rest. He said there was nothing wrong with him physically that a long vacation would not cure. He is just "tired," he added.

HUNGARY:

Demands Ransom

The custom of blackmail, ransom and intrigue so often employed by the Nazis in the reign of terror over Europe, has put in a more obvious appearance under the Communists.

Hungary has demanded the ancient crown of St. Stephen as ransom for Robert A. Vogeler, imprisoned American businessman. According to reports from Europe, Hungarian Communists have offered to swap Vogeler for the 1,000-year-old crown which is the symbol of Magyar royalty.

The crown was taken from Hungary by the Nazis and later found by the American troops in Germany.

CORPORATIONS:

Increased Taxes

When the election conscious house and senate began a program of tax cutting after President Truman offered his budget, he warned any reductions must be met with revenue from other sources.

Now, the house ways and means committee, obviously bidding for presidential approval of the excise-tax cut, had voted a $433,000,000 increase in the yearly tax on big corporations.

Admits Spying

David Greenglass, 28, former noncommissioned army officer, has admitted giving Russia information about the atomic bomb. He was the third person arrested in the spy ring since the British scientist Klaus Fuchs was taken into custody.

ESPIONAGE:

New Arrests Made

Since British scientist Klaus Fuchs admitted spying for Russia the F. B. I. has been closing the net around associates in the United States who passed along classified atomic information to him.

As a result two new arrests have been made. One of the accused admitted that he passed along atomic secrets from the Los Alamos, N. M., plant in 1945.

He is David Greenglass, a 28-year-old former Communist league leader who explained his act: "I felt it was gross negligence on the part of the United States not to give Russia the information about the atom bomb because she was an ally."

The other accused, Dean Slack, a 44-year-old Syracuse, N. Y., chemist, denied he knew Henry Gold, the first arrested in this country. He added he was not and never had been a Communist.

Both men are held under $100,000 bonds.

Meanwhile, a grand jury investigating Amerasia case, which has been much in the headlines recently, cleared the administration's handling of the stolen documents case, but strongly recommended the impaneling of a new grand jury to continue the investigation.

Also in connection with the case, Emmanuel S. Larsen, himself arrested and fined in the 1945 case that hinged on the theft of hundreds of diplomatic and military papers, told a senate investigating committee he regarded former navy lieutenant Andrew Roth as a "Communist, and the principal conspirator" in the stolen-documents case.

Government officials indicated that the arrest of Slack and Greenglass was only the beginning in the battle to break up what may possibly be one of the greatest spy rings in the history of this country.

COMMUNISTS:

Defeat by Ballot

Political observers were pleased with the outcome of the state election returns in the Ruhr section of Western Germany. They felt it was a defeat of the Communists by the ballot.

In the British zone the voters picked a 215-seat parliament and voted on a proposed state constitution. The returns indicated Communist strength had tumbled to a postwar low when they received only 5 per cent of the valid ballots, compared with 14 per cent in the election three years ago.

The workers, however, favored the proposed state constitution with its socialization clause:

"Large factories of the basic industries and undertakings which, because of their monopolistic position have special significance, shall be transferred to common ownership."

The specific industries were not named in the draft.

Western observers felt the elections justifiable in that they would:

1. Give the new nationalist parties, which were not even in the arena in the federal elections last August a chance to show their muscle.

2. Tell whether communism is gaining in Western Germany.

3. Test the popularity of the West German Federal Government's policies.

Rent Control

The house and senate committees considering rent control have agreed upon a six-month extension of federal controls and another six months in communities which want them.

Although both branches of congress must approve the measure, there seemed little doubt that they would do so.

Observers said the bill will be on

LABOR:

Degree of Unity

A degree of future unity between big labor unions appeared on the horizon as the A.F.L. and the C.I.O. worked on plans for their pending cooperation conference. The one notable exception, however, was the uninvited United Mine Workers.

UMW chief John L. Lewis was not happy at being left out of the conference. He said a conference without his union is no way to achieve labor unity.

While he was making that statement, the national labor relations board took a swat at the UMW by ruling it broke the Taft-Hartley law by a campaign of violence to organize employees of a Harlan county, Kentucky, department store.

The board ordered the union to cease assaulting, or threatening the store employees. If the union ignores the order it could eventually lead to possible jail sentences or fines for union officials.

But while the UMW struggles with its problems, there were long strides by the other union toward cooperation—if not eventual merger.

Among the developments:

1. Joseph D. Keenan, top A.F.L. political organizer addressed the C. I. O.'s political action committee. His subject was a renewed effort by the union to unite to repeal the Taft-Hartley law.

2. A cross section of American labor ranks attended a two-day meeting aimed at raising assistance for the Israeli federation of labor.

3. The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen accepted C. I. O. proposal for a committee to work together on common problems and eventually aim at consolidation.

INFLATION:

To Financial Ruin

Former President Herbert Hoover, in a speech before the U. S. Junior Chamber of Commerce convention in Chicago, has again warned that financial disaster is in prospect for the country unless the government curtails its spending policies drastically.

Unless an immediate halt is ordered on spending, Mr. Hoover predicted the undermining of an economy which he said would provide one million new jobs annually. For 17 years, he maintained, Democratic administrations had continued the spending spree.

"Financing government deficits by borrowing, if continued long enough, has only one end—inflation," the former President said. "We ourselves have already decreased the purchasing power of the dollar about 50 per cent, and we are still creeping along the road.

"The five-cent telephone call and the five-cent fare have already gone, and the five-cent bar has shrunk. A new round of inflation is now appearing in direct or indirect wage and salary increases and rising commodity prices.

"If we keep on this road, we are certain to realize the President's ideal of $4,000 a year to every family. But it will not have $4,000 purchasing power.

"To this question of further government borrowing to meet deficits, my answer is that it is the road to disaster for every cottage in the land."

DEFICIT:

At 3.8 Billion

The administration has predicted a $5,400,000 deficit by the end of the fiscal year June 30, but shortly before the deadline it appeared the amount would be well under the estimate.

A $773,625,000 interest payment on the national debt boosted the deficit to $3,887,529,000. The payment was made two weeks before the end of the fiscal year.

To Retire

Governor Thomas E. Dewey (center) is shown being interviewed by newsmen shortly before he announced he would not be a candidate for reelection as governor of New York when his second term expires next December. He may return to private law practice.

BRIDGES MINED:

Just in Case

Whether or not the world is face to face with another war has been in the minds of the everyday citizen almost since the final shot was fired in World War II.

Now it comes to light that the key roads and bridges in Western Germany are being prepared for quick destruction in case of a Soviet attack. Similar preparations apparently are being made in other Euro-

Beginning of Rubber

Prehistoric Indians were the first to tap the rubber tree. They made rubber shoes, bottles and coated fabrics. Columbus discovered them playing with rubber balls. It was not until 1770 that Dr. Joseph Priestly gave it the name of "rubber." He found that the gum removed pencil marks. But Europeans found rubber too sticky in hot weather and too brittle in cold. Charles Goodyear, Yankee inventor, invented the vulcanizing process in 1839. After that the rubber industry boomed. Vulcanization made possible the many rubber products we have today—tires, clothing, insulation, foam rubber.

Bye, Bye, Blackboard

It's Bye, Bye, Blackboard in the modern school room. Green chalk boards with yellow chalks take their place. The innovation is recommended by the American Optometric Association in the interest of easier seeing. Blackboards absorb too much light and cause visual distortion.

20/20 Vision

The idea that 20/20 vision is "perfect" is a fallacy, according to Dr. J. Ottis White, Louisiana optometrist. It merely means that one can see what he should see at 20 feet, but gives no indication of one's ability to see within arm's length, the distance at which most critical seeing is done, he said.

Hospital Bed

A new hospital bed that can be operated by the patient without the aid of a nurse may be a boon to nurses and patients alike. The inventors claim that the electrically and hydraulically controlled bed is foolproof—the patient cannot end up in an awkward position.

More Steel for France

Mechanization is on the way for war-weakened French steel industry. Westinghouse is building $9,500,000 worth of electrical equipment to help bolster it. Order for the equipment was placed by SOLLAC, a privately owned asso-

Prize Livestock

Livestock owners bringing their animals home after competition in state and county fairs are advised to keep them apart from home herds for 30 days—just in case they may have picked up a contagious disease that is slow in showing up. The American Veterinary Medical association says there is always a chance that show stock may be exposed to infection in transit or while on the fair grounds, yet it may take three weeks before signs of illness become apparent. In the meantime, quarantining them protects the home herd from exposure.

Greek National Costume

Forty yards of material are used in the skirt of the Greek national costume — the ballerina-like kit worn by the Army's elite corps, the Evzones. Ten yards more go into the Evzone's flowing sleeves. Embroidered vest, tasseled garters, tasseled cap, and pompons on his boots complete the fancy-dress uniform.

Confused the Germans

Comanche, a tribe of buffalo-hunting Indians who spent their early days raiding Spanish ranches, often were used in pairs during World War I to transmit telephone messages. Their language, which has never been written down, caused the German code experts a great deal of confusion.

Avoid Brooder Fires

Check over the heating facilities and electric equipment in the brooder houses for any defects which might result in fires. So-called accidental fires often could have been prevented by making proper repairs long before the fire broke out.

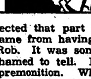
GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara



On a visit to the Daly ranch, Ken hears from Buck Daly that a white stallion had crashed in the crate bearing the filly and Buck poses the idea that the stallion was Thunderhead. Ken doesn't think so because, on orders of his father, Rob, Ken has Thunderhead holed up in the "valley of the eagles" wherefrom he thinks it impossible for Thunderhead to escape. But Daly insists it was Thunderhead he saw, and Ken begins to entertain a suspicion that perhaps it was Thunderhead after all. Ken has seen the broken crate and realizes the loss to Greenway will be extensive, since Crown Jewel was bought in England and shipped to the United States.

CHAPTER III

Pauly, a little brown tortoise-shell cat with long topaz eyes, appeared in the stable door, and stood there with dignity, looking out into the corral. In her mouth she held a large rat, still alive, and her head was high to carry the weight.

"See that big rat!" exclaimed Wink.

"She get one yoost about every day," said Gus.

"She's got kittens," said Tim, "and she hunts rats and bunnies and gophers all day for them."

A loud, indignant moo-oo-oo came from the east corral behind the barn.

Rob looked at Gus in surprise. "What in hell are the cows doing up here?"

"It ain't our cows, Boss. Some of Johnson's cows broke tru de fence in de corner of Section Eighteen. Nine white faces and some calves. Wink and Tim found 'em and corralled 'em. Want I should tell Wink to drive 'em back?"

"No. Wink's got to milk. I'll send Ken."

"Howard then."

"There's his horse." Rob pointed to a tall black, grazing in the pasture outside the corral.

"He tuk de station wagon."

"To get the mail?"

"Yah."

Rob gave an impatient exclamation. "And now it's milking time. When those kids get off the ranch they don't ever get home!"

"Dot's kids for you," said Gus, a slow warm smile crinkling his pink face.

Rob stood a moment, thinking, —he was annoyed at the failure of the boys to show up.

He strode suddenly forward and Kim arose and ran around the corral to follow.

The cows were waiting at the gate of the pasture to be milked. Formerly, Nell had taken complete charge of the dairy. But now there was the baby, Penelope Margaret, named after Nell's mother and his own, and her care took most of Nell's time.

Rob reached the paved yard behind the kitchen door of the house. Nell would be upstairs with Penny. Soon now, she would give Penny her bath and her supper.

Nell's Condition Puzzling to Rob

At the thought of Nell, he became motionless. There was a look of puzzlement on his face. . . . Nell! How quiet she was these days. She didn't look well. She'd always had a tendency to have circles under her eyes but since Penny was born, they had been blue and transparent. Or was she worried? Dissatisfied? Had he fallen down on anything he should have done. She couldn't be unhappy now—not now—why, he had given her the piano! She had a cook! And two new bathrooms and a furnace had been installed since the new band of sheep had brought prosperity to the Goose Bar Ranch!

Rob went into the house and stood at the foot of the stairs, listening, wondering if Nell were taking a nap, but no sound reached him. He returned to the living-room and paused beside the piano, his hand caressing the polished surface. His pride in this gift to his wife was accompanied by chagrin that for so many years of her life with him she should have been without one.

He had wondered if she had missed it dreadfully. You couldn't tell. She never spoke of it.

All the greater, then, had been his happiness when he counted up the first crop of lambs from his new flocks, and realized that the time had come when he could give Nell a piano.

He had told her only that he had to go to Denver to arrange with a commission house for the sale of the lambs and that he might be gone for several days.

He had spent the time with the leading musician of Denver, a celebrated pianist, who went with him from one store to another. They sampled every second-hand grand piano of good make which was advertised for sale. The one they had picked, at last, was a reconstructed Steinway, twenty-five years old, embodying a number of advantageous features which newer makes did not have.

All this drifted through Rob's mind as he stood there stroking the piano. He reached a finger down and pressed on one of the notes, trying to hear in it the things his wife heard. At that moment there was the sound of the station wagon coming up the hill behind the house.

Rob went to the back door and threw it open.

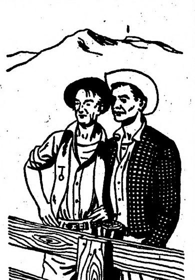
"Howard!"

"Yes, sir—here's the mail."

"Mail! You left here at one to get the mail and now it's milking time! Where's Ken?"

"Well, Dad, he's gone up to the valley to see Thunderhead."

Rob's eyes narrowed. He kept looking at Howard without speaking. Howard continued, "You see the haying's over and soon we'll be going back to school," Howard paused checking the truth of every thing he was saying, "and he was awfully keen on seeing Thunderhead again."



Rob and Gus were examining the weather, planning the next day's work.

Rob Ponders Ken's Actions

Rob continued to eye him as if waiting, but Howard looked down and said nothing.

"Did he see Daly?"

"Oh, sure! Yeah—he saw Daly and told him about feeding the rams up."

"Where did he eat?"

"At Tie Siding. I ran into him there when I went for the mail."

"Well then, he won't get back tonight—" It was more statement than question. Rob waited a moment.

When Howard merely shook his head, Rob's tone changed.

"Howard there's something I want you to do. You'll have to take your horse. A lot of Johnson's cattle broke through the fence up on the corner of Section Eighteen. They're up in the east corral, nine white-face cows and some calves. You drive them off our land, put them where they belong and mend the fence before you come back."

"Yes, sir," said Howard with alacrity, jumping out of the car.

Rob closed the door and walked toward his desk, his lips tightening in an expression that was half grim, half amused. He had some work to do on his accounts, but before he began, he gave a few moments of thought to Ken's behavior. Whenever Thunderhead was concerned, or that valley up in the Buckhorns, Ken was loco. If he had gone up there now, something was doing. Howard! Rob broke into a chuckle. Either Howard was circumbobulating and didn't care who knew it or he was making a bad job of it. Well, anyway, Howard was shielding Ken. Wait until the kid came back—

He pulled his papers toward him. After sixteen years of losing money on horses he was now making money on sheep. This meant being able to educate his children properly, employ sufficient help to train and school those horses which he intended to keep, and give Nell the comforts and luxuries he so passionately wanted her to have.

Nell's life was quiet now, not so much riding, not so much to do with her sons and husband, not with the ranch activities. And not so much activity in the house, either, for there was Pearl to do the housework and cooking; leaving Nell time to take care of Penny and to read and practice and to rest.

It was a great change for her, after having lived like a big sister with her growing boys for so long. Often she was surprised to find herself lonely. Penny was like a darling rose in her bosom, or like a thread of melody in her ear, but not yet a companion.

Nell suspected that part of her loneliness came from having a secret from Rob. It was something she was ashamed to tell. It was, merely, a premonition. When all was going so well with the family, with the ranch, the sheep, the baby girl they had wanted so passionately, could she be the one to cry, "It is all false! Trouble is coming!" No—of course not. Anyway, it was probably nonsense. She would get over it. But those dreams—always of disaster—

The dream this morning, just at dawn, had been the worst of all—a nightmare. How real! Being strangled and unable to move, or do the least thing to help herself! And suddenly being awake enough to know that she was lying there in the bed, with Rob beside her, and yet the strangling and the terror and the awful presence that was beating down upon her continuing.

It had faded and she had come fully awake, panting, perspiration on her forehead, and, still the constriction in her throat and anxious not to wake Rob, but forced by her terror to do something to break the spell, she had slipped out of bed and gone through the open door into Penny's nursery.

Nell and Rob shared the large square room over the kitchen, warm in winter, facing the Green and the morning sun. The small room adjoining, Rob's dressing-room, had now been turned over to Penny and held her white-painted furniture ornamented with little clusters of forget-me-nots and pink roses and bowknots of ribbon. There was the chiffonier in which her clothes were kept, the large table holding scales, toilet articles and bath, there were her little table and tiny chairs.

Nell had gone first to the crib. In the faint light of dawn she could see the baby, lying flat on her back, head turned sideways so that her face was in profile, both arms out on the pillow, crooked at the elbow, the closed pink hands making tiny fists.

Then she had gone to the window to look out and see how near it was to sunrise and there, down on the Green, were a man and woman dancing together. It was Pearl, of course, cutting up with a most decrepit object, shirttail flapping outside his baggy dark trousers, rolled-up sleeves showing thin, hairy arms, a battered black felt on his head. The clothes looked empty but they capered ecstatically, keeping pace with Pearl and the brisk wind which whipped her full cotton skirts about her aged legs.

Nell wondered if the man dancing on the lawn was Tom. Pearl had spoken that name with romantic tenderness. Romance? Ah . . . Romance between the capering scarecrow and maudlin Pearl . . . dancing on the Green in the windy dawn.

Presently she heard Howard's voice outside. That was Rob talking to him.

Soon after breakfast next morning, Rob, mounted on Reveille, and Howard on Jester, and Ross Buckley on Senator, were schooling their horses in the practice field below the cowbarns. These were three fine geldings, conforming to Army specifications, four years old, fifteen and a half hands high, unblemished.

A large black car appeared on the road and stopped, drawing up along the rail fence of the practice field.

Descending from the car was a tall thin man, with a genial ruddy face under a thatch of grey hair, dressed in the Westerner's compromise between town and country, the tight-fitting whipcord trousers called "Cheyenne pants," a waist-length jacket, and wide-brimmed felt hat. He limped a little, there was an accousticon in his ear and a small michrophone on the breast pocket of his jacket.

Beaver Greenway Visits the Ranch

"Beaver Greenway!" yelled Rob, dismounting and going to the fence. "What brought you to this part of the world?" The two men shook hands and Rob's eyes took in the car, the English-looking fellow at the wheel with the checked cap and the look of a man who lives around horses—red face, receding chin, popeyes. Another man was getting out of the tonneau whom Rob recognized as the Cheyenne freight agent.

"Hackett!" exclaimed Rob. "Glad to see you!" Hackett advanced and shook hands.

"This is my son, Greenway, my older son—you met Ken a year ago—"

Rob motioned to Howard, who dismounted in one swift smooth step, looping the reins over his arm.

"Well," said Greenway, "I've got a tale of woe to tell, and Hackett here suggested you might be the man to help me out."

Howard looked interested and moved a step closer. But Rob said, "Well, Howard, you've got a morning's work on the plug—here, tie Reveille to the fence for me, will you?"

Fertilizers, which are cheaper in the winter, can be stored easily on most farms. A dry place is needed on a board floor that permits air circulation.

Topdressing Pastures Adds Grazing Days, Boosts Legume Yields

CHICAGO—Milk pails will be fuller next spring and you will get bigger dividends from extra grazing days and more tons of hay, if you topdress your pastures and grasslands this fall with phosphate and potash fertilizer.

Fertilizer added in the fall helps deep-rooted legumes and grasses make a sturdier, fuller growth, says the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee. The roots dig themselves in more firmly. The plants weather the winter in better condition for early spring growth.

Earlier spring growth means a longer grazing season. It means fewer days of barn feeding for your cows.

Agronomists recommend adding heavy amounts of phosphate and potash fertilizer to pastures and grasslands. Tests at state agricultural stations show that applications of 300 to 600 pounds per acre produce profitable results.

How Minnesota can compete with Venezuela and Labrador

"WE READ IN DAILY NEWSPAPERS of iron ore reserves in Venezuela," writes Robert D. Anderson, editor of the Crosby Courier. "We've also heard quite a bit about iron ore prospecting in Canada and Labrador. Discoveries in those countries amount to billions of tons—mountains of ore. Mining companies are investing millions of dollars into these foreign ore bodies, and it won't be too many years now before they begin importing ore dug there."

Anderson

YOU CAN'T SHRUG OFF the size and importance of these foreign ore fields. Yet Minnesota CAN compete in iron ore with Venezuela—and Canada and Labrador. All we must do is USE WHAT WE HAVE. What do we have?—

- It is estimated we have nearly 900 million tons of iron ores of the types now being produced. Much of it lies buried deep below the surface, and is therefore much more expensive to mine.
- We have additional billions of tons of taconite ores—a supply for the indefinite future. Taconite is tough to process. It must be extensively treated—really manufactured—before shipping.

Why not get going, then? The answer is simple—it's all a problem of COST. Our remaining ores—high-grade, low-grade, taconite—will ALL be more costly to produce than the ores we've been using.

And still, somehow, these more expensive ores have got to be produced cheaply enough to sell against the high-grade foreign ores.

What's the solution, then?

FIRST, Minnesota's ore producers must keep seeking the best and cheapest ways to use existing ores. They are investing millions of dollars in costly equipment and research.

SECOND, Minnesota should lend a hand by treating the iron ore industry as fairly as it treats any other state industry. Minnesota people should recognize that their ore industry cannot shoulder a tax burden at rates two or three times greater than other industries and, at the same time, put hundreds of millions of dollars into new plants and payrolls.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

Peterson-Larson Wedding

Nazareth Lutheran Church was the scene of a pretty candlelight wedding Thursday evening June 29, at eight o'clock, when Miss Joyce Yvonne Peterson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Anton Peterson, became the bride of Duane Walter Larson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Larson of Holt. Rev. V. G. Sorenson officiated at the single ring ceremony in the presence of approximately 150 guests. Baskets of cut flowers decorated the altar.

Nuptual music was played by Dorothy Sagstuen, who accompanied Delores Sandberg who sang "I Love You Truly" and "O, Perfect Love".

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of white satin with lace yoke, buttoned back, long pointed sleeves and full skirt extending in a lace edged train. Her three quarter length veil, which was borrowed from her cousin, Mrs. Milton Conklin, was held in place by a tiarra of seed pearls and miniature calla lilies. She carried a colonial bouquet of pink roses and wore a rhinestone necklace, gift of the groom.

Miss Joyce Johnson, friend of the bride was bridesmaid. She wore a white gown of silk marquisette, fashioned with a sweet heart neckline and shirred bodice. She carried a colonial bouquet of pink roses with white ribbon streamers, similar to the brides.

Kenneth Larson, brother of the groom, was best man. Raymond Sagstuen and Arthur Lunke, brother-in-laws of the bride, were ushers. All gentlemen wore white carnation buttoniers.

Jeanelle Henning, cousin of the bride, was flower girl and wore a pale pink formal. She carried a miniature colonial bouquet identical to the brides.

Harold Larson, brother of the groom, was ring bearer. He wore an aqua suit with a black bow tie and carried the ring on a satin pillow.

The bride's mother and the groom's mother both wore aqua dresses with white accessories, and had identical corsages of pink tea roses and gardenias. The grandmothers, Mrs. Cora Johnson, Mrs. Annie Anderson and Mrs. Emil Larson wore dark dresses and had corsages of pink tea roses and white carnations.

After the ceremony, a reception was held for approximately 125 relatives. The bridal table was decorated with pink and white streamers and was centered by a three tiered wedding cake topped with a miniature bride and groom. Waitresses were Ione Larson, who wore a lavender formal and Helen Gullingsrud. who wore a blue formal. They had pink carnation corsage. Mrs. Olaf Ness, aunt of the bride, poured. Mrs. Arthur Lunke, sister of the bride, cut the wedding cake and Mrs. Raymond Sagstuen, sister of the bride had charge of the guest book.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Cold War Flames Into Hot War On Korea Front; U.N. Condemns Invasion by Communist Forces

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

KOREA:

A Hot War

The cold war, which has caused one crisis after another in recent months, had flamed into a hot war on one front. Soviet sponsored armies of North Korea invaded South Korea, established by the United Nations with the blessing and aid of the United States.

First reports of the attack were confused. It was known, however, that the invaders advanced as much as 12 miles into South Korea by using ground forces totaling as many as 40,000 men, plus 90 tanks. An additional 10,000 men were believed ready to reinforce the invaders.

Some reports indicated the invaders had penetrated within 12 miles of Seoul, capital of South Korea, while others said the northerners had been checked almost immediately. There were reports also of amphibious landing on the east coast of South Korea.

The main attack was directed along the Uijongbu valley, for centuries the path of invaders. Maj. Gen Choi Byung Kud, chief of staff of the South Korea army, reported.

Sihn Sung Mo, acting Premier and defense minister, said he had evidence that of northern tanks captured in the first attack, half of the crews were Russian. Minister Kim Yong Ju was in Tokyo when the attack was launched.

Meanwhile, the United States began the evacuation of 600 Americans from the Seoul area. They were leaving Korea by sea with U.S. air protection. The evacuation plan was completed only a week before the sneak attack.

According to American military men who have been directing the training of the South Korea army, the defenders have 95,000 men to battle the invaders. They will be handicapped, however, by the lack of an air force and tanks.

North Korea is reported to have 106 military planes, including 70 Russian Yaks and 25 Stormoviks.

FARM SUPPORTS:

Senate Approves

After a hot floor debate, the senate completed congressional action and sent to President Truman a bill to give the Commodity Credit Corporation an additional $2,000,000,000 to finance its federal farm price-support programs. The President was expected to sign the measure.

The debate developed over a provision in the bill which would shut the door on imported foreign farm crops if they threatened to upset the domestic farm-support program.

The provision was included in the bill and requires Secretary of Agriculture Brannan to demand an investigation of the tariff commission whenever he believes foreign imports are interfering with domestic farm programs.

The additional $2,000,000,000 would increase the C.C.C. total borrowing authority to $6,750,000,000. Most of the money now available to the agency is tied up in price-support loans and purchase agreements.

The measure barely got through the senate, 36 to 35 after Vice-President Barkley exercised his constitutional vote to break a 35-35 tie.

Critics of the measure said it would wreck the reciprocal-trade program, sometimes called the keystone of the nation's foreign policy.

Retires

Joe McCarthy, 63, has resigned as manager of the Boston Red Sox and retired from baseball because of his health. He led the New York Yankees to seven world championships before retiring in 1946. He came out of retirement to take over the Sox. Above he gets a friendly kiss from the family pet as he arrives home.

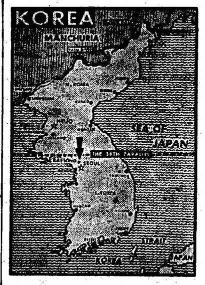
ERICKSON:

Goes to Jail

Frank Erickson, called America's greatest bookmaker and king of a nationwide gambling business, has been sentenced to two years in jail and fined $30,000.

Erickson, could have been sentenced to one year on each of 59 counts of bookmaking. He was sentenced to one year on the bookmaking counts and one year for conspiracy.

War Scene



Troops from Communist-dominated North Korea are reported pushing their way southward following the sneak attack on U.S. backed South Korea. Four thousand troops were reported killed in the initial phase of the shooting. This map shows the 38th parallel which separates North Korea from the south.

UNITED NATIONS:

North Korea Guilty

The United Nations, in an emergency session shortly after the sneak attack by Communist dominated North Korea on South Korea, branded the north the aggressor and ordered an immediate cease-fire throughout Korea.

The Soviet Union was conspicuous by the absence of its delegates from the emergency session.

Acting swiftly and bluntly, the U.N. termed the assault an "unprovoked attack" and a "clear threat to international peace and security."

The resolution called for immediate cease-fire and implicated that the U.N. would move to take stronger measures if North Korea flouted the council.

Meanwhile, reaction in the United States was immediate and to the point. President Truman cut short a visit to Missouri and returned to Washington. A conference was called between top diplomatic and defense chiefs.

The problem they faced was a critical one. The situation demanded a clear and strong reaction since too much was at stake in terms of American prestige in the Far East.

As a result, a "critical amount" of arms aid was said to have been started to Korea immediately. It was also reported General MacArthur had been authorized to draw on stocks of equipment available in Japan rather than let Korea wait for shipments to be put together in the United States.

Many American observers saw the attack on South Korea as a Soviet test of U.S. reaction toward aggression. They did not believe, however, that the Communists are ready for any military aggression on a broad international scale.

It was recalled by many that World War II started with acts of aggression against minor powers and not from declarations of war. With this view in mind, the question arose whether the North Korea attack is an early test of physical and moral strength of the democratic nations.

The present situation calls for firmness, political observers agree.

PLANE CRASH:

Worst in History

The worst commercial airline tragedy in the nation's history took place in Lake Michigan of St. Joseph, Mich., when a Northwest Airlines plane plunged into the lake during a severe thunderstorm with 55 passengers and three crew members aboard.

Two days after the giant craft disappeared, parts of the plane, a section of an airplane log book, and parts of two bodies were dragged from the lake.

The plane, filled to capacity, vanished on a flight from New York to Seattle by way of Minneapolis.

St. Joseph is about 110 miles southeast of Milwaukee on the eastern shore of Lake Michigan.

Teachers

The nationwide shortage of teachers and classrooms is going to get worse unless something "drastic" is done. Willard E. Givens, executive secretary of the National Education association reports.

In his annual report, Givens estimated school population in the next decade will increase almost 7,500,000, from 26,635,000 to 34,091,000. He said 750,000 more teachers will be needed.

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

Captain Rob McLaughlin has begun to notice strange behavior of his wife, Nell. It puzzles and worries him. Nell seems continually unhappy and harassed. In reminiscing, Rob recalls their early days on the ranch and how happy Nell was when he surprised her with a gift of a new piano. It hasn't always been easy sailing for Rob McLaughlin. Development of the ranch has been a big job and there have been some hard times; but now the ranch is making money and he is consoled by the fact that he is able, at last, to educate his sons, Ken and Howard, properly. He shakes off the mood of depression which gripped him as he thought of Nell's condition.

CHAPTER IV

Howard, obviously disappointed, did as he was told. Rob vaulted the fence and said to his visitors, "We can drive you up to the house and be comfortable."

But Greenway had already seated himself on a boulder by the roadside. "This is all right, McLaughlin. What I've come for—well, there's been a sort of accident."

The man at the wheel opened the door and emerged from the car. Dejectedly, he seated himself on the running board.

At the word "accident" Rob's eyes turned to the freight agent. "Not on the railroad, I hope? Anyone hurt?"

"Nothing as bad as that," said Greenway, "but I've lost a piece of freight."

"Oh." Rob was filling his pipe, carefully tamping the tobacco into the bowl.

Hackett braced one foot on a rock and leaned his arms on his thigh. His comfortable paunch, his cherub face, did not today convey their usual impression of affability. "I'm a worried man," he said. "McLaughlin, that piece of freight was valued at ten thousand dollars."

"Should think you would be worried!" Rob gibed at him. "Can't you fire someone?"

Hackett tried to grin back.

"Briefly," said Greenway, "this is what happened. A filly I had bought from the Beckwith breeding stables in England was lost off the railroad in transit. The crate in which she was traveling left the flatcar on the sharp curve this side of Red Buttes and rolled down the incline. I got to Red Buttes to meet her—no filly! No crate!"

"Flatcar!" Rob's amazed eyes turned to Hackett. "They wouldn't ship her on a flatcar—and with her crate so loosely lashed that it could swing off on a curve! The railroads don't do things like that—"

Hackett groaned, "Don't rub it in!"

Greenway made a disgusted gesture. "It was my fault. I was in too much of a damned hurry to see the filly. See here, this is the way it was. She was shipped from England in charge of Collins here—" his head tilted toward the car and as Rob looked at him, the groom touched his cap. "I can vouch for him. He has been in my employ for years. I sent him to England to bring back the filly. She was coming on a through train to Foxville, Idaho, which is the nearest station on the main line to my ranch. We followed her travels, of course. I say 'we' because she's a present for my little girl grandniece, Carey." He paused a moment. "Carey is a grand little girl, McLaughlin. She and I are great pals. She's a chip off the old block, loves anything on four legs and has ridden since she could walk."

Rob nodded but said nothing.

Greenway continued, "I met the train yesterday morning at Red Buttes and she was gone! Crate and all!"

Rob was stupified. "I suppose you've found the body? Was she completely crushed? God!" he interrupted himself, "I hate to think of it!"

Greenway's face brightened. "Wait a minute! From here on the story gets more cheerful! She wasn't killed. She wasn't even hurt!"

"What!"

Greenway continued. "You'll think it's a piece of fiction but here's what happened. A stallion comes along, kicks the crate to pieces, runs away with the filly!"

"That doesn't sound like fiction to me," said Rob. "Hey! I've got a notion who the stallion is! I've got a big red fellow up on the Saddle Back there," he pointed with the stem of his pipe to the long indented hill above the ranch. "And he wouldn't pass up a ten-thousand-dollar filly!. If he did, I'd fire him!" He laughed at his own joke. He broke off suddenly, and then said, "Greenway, do you ride?"

Proof Piles Up Men Saw Thunderhead

Indignantly, Greenway answered, "I ride better than I walk or hear! I broke my ankle playing polo and lost my hearing when the Turk kicked me in the head!"

"Fine!" exclaimed Rob.

Greenway put his hand ruefully on the side of his head. "Not so fine—I wouldn't say—"

"I mean—fine that you ride. You and I are going to have a ride, and I'll show you your filly! But wait a minute. How do you know this? Are you sure?"

"A young fellow told it to the station agent at Red Buttes. He saw it himself."

"Who was he?"

"His name is Buck Daly."

"I know him. He's the son of the man who keeps my rams for me. He's a good kid and he knows horses. If he says he saw that happen, it happened. But God, man!" he stepped forward to give Greenway a slap on the back. "What luck! The damdest luck I ever heard of!" Greenway slowly stood up.

Rob continued, "The filly's not hurt! Banner kicks her free before she dies of lying on her back, and brings her here where she is safe." He pointed again to the Saddle Back. "Up there, Greenway!"

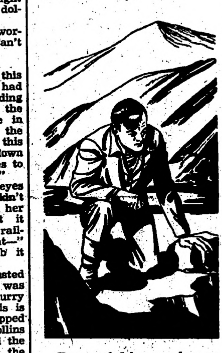
"Wait a minute," said Greenway. "What color did you say your stallion is?"

"Red," answered Rob promptly. "He was a chestnut when he was born, very dark with a tail and mane the color of cream. You never saw such coloring. But when he matured his body got lighter and redder, and his hair darker. It's a perfect match now—red gold—wonderful!"

"But Buck Daly says the stallion he saw was white."

Rob put his pipe back in his mouth and leaned against the fence. His brows came down over his eyes.

Hackett said, "Now, of course, that's the strange thing about it—we all thought—" he hesitated.



He was glad he was alone so no one could see he was crying.

Rob said slowly. "It's very strange. I've only known two white stallions in my life. One was called the Albino, a wild horse that used to roam these mountain states and steal mares wherever he could find them—he crossed some of my mares. If he was alive, he'd be the one that did this. But he isn't. He died a violent death a little over a year ago, killed by his own great-grandson—a throwback to him, a colt who was born right on this ranch out of Ken's mare, Flicka. We named him Thunderhead and he's the other white stallion I have known."

"Why couldn't it have been him, McLaughlin?" said Hackett eagerly. "He's the one we thought of right away."

"Because he isn't here any more. He's twenty miles away from here shut into a valley in the Buckhorn Mountains with all of the mares and colts that used to belong to the Albino."

"How do you mean—shut in?" asked Greenway.

Robin Begins to See Glimmer of Light

"Well, the valley is in the crater of an old volcano. It is surrounded by a rampart of volcanic stone. A fissure in this was the entrance to the valley. Ken simply blew up that pathway with dynamite and completely closed it so that Thunderhead could live in there as the Albino had—a sort of king. The natural, wild life."

"With his great-grandsire's harem," grinned Greenway. "To the winner belongs the spoils! Is that it?"

"Exactly!"

"Hah! Sounds as if you know something! Let's have it!"

"My wife was down in Colorado visiting about a month ago. She heard a lot of talk about a stallion that had been raiding the ranches around there, and stealing mares. Folks thought the Albino had come to life again, because it was a white stallion."

There was a moment's silence.

"When was this?" Rob snapped.

"July—August. A dry farmer down at Glendevy, Jeff Stevens, had his two work mares stolen from him—the only work team he had. It pretty near broke him up. Two fine Morgan mares. And ever at Steamboat Springs, the man that owns the daily paper, name of Ashley Gildersleeve, he lost a fine saddle mare he had put out at pasture. And he wrote a piece in the paper and called him the 'White Raider' or something like that."

Rob rubbed his chin thoughtfully. "But why should he leave that valley? And all his mares and colts?"

The men stood around in silence for a few moments. Then Greenway asked, "Where is your boy now, McLaughlin? The one who owns the white stallion?"

As Rob turned to answer him an odd expression of surprise dawned on his face. "Strange coincidence! He's up in that valley!"

His eyes turned to Howard who was painstakingly putting Jester through a series of figure eights in the middle of the field. "I'm beginning to think everyone knew about this before I did, Howard!"

Howard cantered over to the fence and dismounted.

In a few sentences Rob acquainted Howard with the situation, and asked if Ken had known about it.

"Yes, sir. Buck told him. Buck thought it was Thunderhead. Ken went up to the valley to find out if he was there or not."

Rob turned to the others with a little shrug of his shoulders. "So that's it! We'll know for certain when Ken gets back! That's all, Howard." Howard mounted and cantered away again.

"The thing is," said Greenway, "whoever the stallion is, I want the filly back, if it's possible to find her. There would be tracks to follow. And, by the way, this boy, Buck Daley, said there was another horse near the crate—a horse he called Pete."

Rob nodded. "An old farm horse. Big fellow."

"Buck said Pete was with the filly before the stallion got there." Greenway laughed, "The way he put it—he said he guessed they had talked all night and become friends."

"It's so human it's gruesome," said Greenway. "Perhaps, then, the filly has two suitors with her. Buck Daly said Pete—if it was Pete—followed them."

Rob puffed at his pipe for a few moments. "It ought not to be too hard to follow that trail," he said.

Ken was standing on the rampart of the valley, looking over it to the mountains in the south that guarded it, range after range blanketed with a fresh fall of snow—Kyrie and the Thunderer and Epsilon and Lindbergh and Torrey Peak.

He was glad that he was alone so that no one could see that he had been crying.

And then it all seemed too much for Ken, and he put both hands over his face and sobbed. It was just for a second. And next he did a little clattering dance on the stone of the rampart. And then he looked up at that highest peak of all, the Thunderer, and yelled, "Hi, Thunderhead!" so loud it almost split his throat and the slow echoes wafted it back to him in the living voice of the mountain, "I Thunderhead!" Then he rushed back to Flicka, mounted her, and rode home as fast as he could.

Sleep would not come immediately. The images still danced in his brain.

Ken and Carey Almost Collide

When Ken awoke he did not know where he was. Piece by piece the memories came back to him, and at last he sat up wondering how long he had been there.

He stood up, stretched, brushed the hay off himself and looked around, coming back to the world from the far journey which he had made in spirit as well as body.

A glance around him told him the time. The dogs were waiting outside the kitchen door to be fed. The cows had been milked and were standing by the corral gates placidly chewing their cuds. His eyes were arrested by the sight of a large black car drawn up behind the house—Ah! The guests had arrived! The child—Ken began to feel quite himself again, alert and eager. But first to get something to eat. There was still an hour or more before supper.

Buttermilk—there was likely to be a big can of it standing in the cold-water trough in the spring house.

At the door he almost collided with a girl who was coming out, very carefully carrying a tray on which there was a small pitcher. She was walking slowly, her eyes on the pitcher.

"Oh!" exclaimed Ken.

How to dig up more jobs for Minnesotans

LIKE MANY OTHER STATE EDITORS, Harold Schoelkopf of the St. Cloud Times is anxious about the future of Minnesota's iron ore industry. "Our iron ore supply has dwindled," he writes, "and the quality is about to decline, and we have vigorous competition from Labrador." He also makes a suggestion: "If we are to continue to enjoy the benefits of taxes and employment provided by the mining companies, we must begin to think about making it feasible for them to stay here."

Schoelkopf

THERE'S NO DENYING IT: the future of Minnesota's iron ore industry—with all it means in jobs and tax revenue—is indeed in doubt.

And still, under the right conditions, it can be a very bright future—brighter perhaps than most Minnesotans have ever imagined . . .

- NEW JOBS CAN BE CREATED. Since Minnesota's high-grade ore is dwindling, the ore producers want to develop the low-grade and taconite ores. Because these ores must be elaborately processed, really manufactured, twice the manpower will be needed per ton of shipping product. Thus thousands of new jobs for Minnesotans may be found.
- NEW BUSINESS CAN DEVELOP. Already the iron ore companies buy $20 million worth of materials and supplies each year. Far more will be needed if and when the taconite industry blossoms. These new needs can keep many a Minnesota cash register ringing.
- NEW FARM MARKETS CAN BE FOUND. If iron ore payrolls double in size, countless additional carloads of Minnesota-grown crops will find their way to iron range dinner-tables.

What are the conditions that will bring about this bright iron ore future?

FIRST, Minnesota's ore producers must keep seeking the best and cheapest ways to refine taconite and low-grade ores. They are investing many millions of dollars in just such research and in new equipment.

SECOND, Minnesota can give its iron ore industry an assist by treating it as fairly as it treats other state industries . . . by getting away from the "soak the mining companies" attitude.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

Remove All Rust

Metal surfaces should be sandpapered to remove any roughness before applying a new coating of paint or enamel. Any traces of rust should be completely removed or the rust will continue its destruction. Where the surface is sanded down to the metal itself, it should be given a first coat of metal primer before the finishing coats are applied.

Facts About Vision

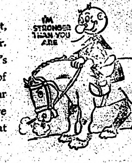
OtterTales

By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

A monthly column of news and information published by Otter Tail Power Company, Fergus Falls, Minnesota

My cousin, Bizzy Kilowatt, came up from Sisseton, South Dakota, last week. "Let's sit down on a couple of burned out fuses somewhere," says Bizzy, "and electrify a little conversation. I'm tired; I just found out that us Kilowatt folks have been working like horses for years and didn't know it."

Well, if Bizzy didn't know it, I figure lots of you folks don't either. The truth of the matter — and it's mighty interesting — is that three of us Kilowatts are as strong as four big draft-horses! And everytime we work an hour, we accomplish what it would take four horses to do!



I'M STRONGER THAN YOU ARE

Imperfect Page

Maybe all that proves is that if it weren't for electricity, the country would be overrun with horses! That's one of the nice things about electricity — it's "hidden power," you might say. Just flick a switch and all of us Kilowatts come springing into action. You can't see us, but we're there — hard at work

For instance, by the end of this summer up at Clearbrook, Minnesota, I'll be busy helping do one of the biggest jobs of its kind. The Otter Tail Power Company folks are putting in a substation there right now so they can furnish auxiliary power for a big pumping station. It's part of the oil pipeline running from way up in Alberta, Canada, to Duluth. When it's finished, it'll carry a volume of 125,000 barrels of oil a day. That's a lot of gas for somebody's car!

PLENTY OF HOT WATER!

I been reading the ads about different kinds of shaving cream lately — but you know as well as I do that what really makes for a quick, comfortable shave is LOTS OF HOT WATER. And that's no problem anymore when you can heat water by ELECTRICITY at such low cost.

The Otter Tail folks will install a combination switch and meter which automatically operates the electric water heater during the off-peak hours of the night at the low rate of 1½c per kilowatt hour.

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

Beaver Greenway hears of the loss of Crown Jewel and berates himself for his impatience to see her, blaming her loss on that impatience. He visits the McLaughlin ranch where he reports that all is not absolute gloom, for he has heard that a stallion drove Crown Jewel off to the hills and he still hopes of recovering her. Rob, advised of the stallion incident, thinks it's his stallion, Banner, which lured Crown Jewel away, but Banner is red, whereas all stories of the stallion in the case say that the horse was white. Rob begins planning search for Crown Jewel. Ken meets lovely Carey Marsh, Greenway's niece, and is attracted by her.

CHAPTER V

She looked up, showing no surprise. She had a quiet, child face, direct gray eyes under dark eyebrows that went up at the tips like swallows' wings, and straight brown hair in a smooth, shining fall to her shoulders. It was held out of her eyes by a blue velvet ribbon.

"Hello," she said gravely.

"Oh," Ken said again, embarrassed, "who—well I guess—oh, you're the child."

"I am Carey," she said quietly.

"Oh." Ken stared at her, thinking he had never seen anyone like her before. What was she anyway? Child or young lady?

Seeing the question in his eyes she gave her full name sedately, "Carey Palmer Marsh."

"Oh. Well. I see. Well—is your mother here too?"

"My mother is dead."

This came in the same quiet way.

"I'm sorry." After that Ken could think of nothing to say. She stood now and then looking right at him, now and then down at the pitcher of buttermilk. Perhaps she was wondering why he did not step to one side and let her pass, but he simply could not move.

"Is your father here?"

"My father is dead too."

"Oh, excuse me! I'm terribly sorry."

"You don't have to be sorry. All that was long ago. I never knew them. I've always lived with my grandmother. That's Mrs. Palmer. And then when I was five, Grandma and I left Philadelphia and came to live with Uncle Beaver. You have met him."

"Oh, yes. I met him a year ago at the races. Oh, I'm terribly sorry about the filly and my stallion's stealing her. She's yours, isn't she?"

It seemed for a moment as if Carey would be unconcerned about this, too. She made no reply, keeping her head down. Then it turned sideways as if to hide her eyes, and he saw big drops sliding down her cheeks. She strained still farther away from him, and then suddenly her face contorted, her mouth went square, showing most of her teeth, her eyes closed tight, and tears drenched her cheeks. Still she made no sound. Now Ken knew that she was just a child.

"Oh, I'm sorry! But don't cry! we'll get her back. Here—you'd better give me the tray—you'll spill it—" He seized the tray, but she recovered herself and clutched it tight.

"No, that's for my grandmother. She wanted some fresh buttermilk."

"I'll take it to her."

"No. She always wants me to wait on her."

"I'll carry it to the house for you then."

"You can hold it for a moment, then."

Ken took the tray and tactfully turned and surveyed the Green while she took a handkerchief from the pocket of her jacket and wiped her face.

When she had regained her composure but was still mopping she said, "What did he steal her for and how could he?"

"That's what stallions do. They get a band of mares and then they take care of them and of all the colts and take them where there's good food and shelter."

Ken Recognizes Carey's Influence

"Thunderhead," she said softly, savoring the name, "Thunderhead." That's a good name for a horse like that."

"He's named after a cloud," said Ken eagerly. "From the day he was born I wanted him to be a racer and I asked Mother to give him a big important name, that would be right for a white horse, and she looked up into the sky, and there was a big white thunderhead creeping slowly up, so she named him that."

"It's beautiful," said Carey slowly. "I wish I could see him."

"Oh, you'll see him! We'll get them both!"

Carey looked at him, thinking of him, now, and not the horses. "You're Ken, aren't you?"

"Yes."

"You've just come back from that place in the mountains where you had him shut up and you found a lot of dead horses there, didn't you?"

"Yes." Ken looked down. He didn't want to talk about it.

There was a silence in which they seemed to be feeling each other out. Then Ken asked, "How old are you?"

"I'm fifteen."

"Oh, are you?" Nearly as old as he. Ken did not know whether he was surprised or not. She had cried like a child and yet there was a curious dignity and composure about her—almost an authority, as you would have to do whatever she said, and who was it that she reminded him of? It came to him with a shock. Heavens! It was his mother! Carey had something of importance about her like his mother!

"Are you sure, Ken?" she asked.

"Sure of what?"

"What you said. That you would get Jewel back for me."

"Yes."

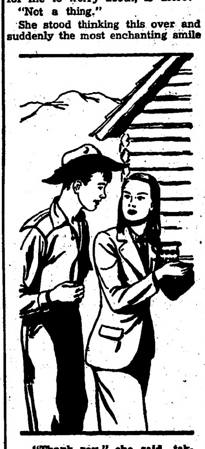
"How can you be? You're not much older than I am. I couldn't get her back."

"Well you see, she's with my stallion. We're going to get him back. We have to. We couldn't leave him out loose on the range."

"Oh. Well then there's nothing for me to worry about, is there?"

"Not a thing."

She stood thinking this over and suddenly the most enchanting smile dawned on her face. Those shining white teeth gleamed again, not framed in a square mouth this time, but between two full lips that went up happily at each corner.



"Thank you," she said, taking the tray away from him and walking toward the house.

"Thank you," she said, taking the tray from him, and walked off toward the house.

Mrs. Palmer kept her eyes fastened on the door, looking out from beneath a cold compress which covered her forehead. She was resting on the wide double bed of the McLaughlin's downstairs guestroom, her head and shoulders supported by pillows. She had removed shoes and dress and put on high-heeled red velvet mules and a red silk wrapper.

At last Carey's footsteps were heard, the door opened and Carey stepped in, holding her tray carefully, her eyes going swiftly to her grandmother's face as if to gauge her humor.

"What do you mean by keeping me waiting so long? What have you been doing?"

Carey carefully closed the door behind her and went forward to her grandmother's bedside. She made room for the tray on the table, at the same time saying contritely, "Oh, Grandma! I'm sorry! Something delayed me—you've taken off your compress. Oh, I think you should have it on—your head is so bad." She squeezed the ice water out of the compress and was about to lay it on her grandmother's forehead again but the old lady's head was quickly turned aside.

Grandma Scornful Of Fuss Over Horse

"I'm sorry," murmured Carey, dropping the compress back into the bowl.

"You're sorry! That's what you say! But here I lie, ill and helpless on this bed in a strange house. And you cannot even do me the one small favor of bringing me a drink of buttermilk without getting sidetracked and 'delayed.' What have you been doing all this time?"

Carey hesitated a little. "I didn't get sidetracked or do anything else, Grandma. It was just one of the boys who was coming into the spring house when I was bringing your milk. One of the McLaughlin boys, and we stood there talking a moment. It wasn't really long. It's just that you're so tired and nervous and thirsty. I'm sorry." And she tenderly put her hand on her grandmother's forehead and smoothed it.

When Mrs. Palmer again turned her head away Carey went softly around the room, picking up garments, hanging them in the closets.

Mrs. Palmer wiped her eyes and became quieter but when she removed the handkerchief from her face she looked dreadfully sad. "Do you, Carey, my darling? Do you really love your old grandmother?"

"Of course, of course!"

"Better than anyone else in the world?" And as she said this, there crept the hint of a teasing smile across her face.

Carey heaved a sigh of relief. "Oh, yes, Grandma!"

Mrs. Palmer put out a hand, a thin, white, aristocratic hand ornamented with several rings and smoothed the girl's hair. "Do you love me the very best? Better than you love your uncle?"

Carey's smile broadened. "Oh, I love Uncle Beaver, too. Lots. But—but you're not well, Grandma, and you need me, and I've got to take good care of you and I feel badly when you are upset like this."

The old woman was calm again. She lay back on the pillow and looked at Carey.

"How about a little of the buttermilk now?" suggested Carey as if to a captious child. "It's so nice. I had a dipperful in the spring house before I filled your pitcher. And it's an hour yet before supper."

She poured a glassful and Mrs. Palmer began to sip it. "And what do you think," Carey said, "Mrs. McLaughlin said I could help give the baby her bath."

The glass of buttermilk stopped halfway to Mrs. Palmer's mouth. "When?"

"Soon, now."

Mrs. Palmer made no answer. The glass of buttermilk did not move. Even her expression did not change. Carey hastily added, "But I don't think I will. Not today, anyway. Perhaps tomorrow."

Mrs. Palmer finished the buttermilk and set down the glass. "How long do you imagine we are going to stay in this god-forsaken place, anyway?"

"Well, it might be several days. They're going to try to find Jewel, you know."

Mrs. Palmer made no more protests. She held out her glass for some more buttermilk and drank it down. Then Carey asked her what she would like her to do until suppertime. Read to her? Or, if she wanted to be quiet, perhaps she could rest better if Carey left the room?

"No," said Mrs. Palmer, "you need a rest yourself. Take off your suit and lie down here on the bed beside me until it's time to dress for supper. Pull the window curtains."

Obediently Carey drew the chintz curtains then stood fingering them, fascinated by the pattern of minature bucking broncos and stage coaches.

"Stop mooning," commanded her grandmother.

Carey left the window, removed her gabardine suit and her blouse and flung herself on the bed.

Sunset filled the dining-room where the McLaughlins and their guests had gathered for the evening meal.

Mrs. Palmer Frowns On Carey's Riding

Nell stood behind her chair at the far end of the table and Beaver Greenway pulled it out for her and then seated himself at the right. He talked, thought Ken, in the silly way that old gentlemen talk to ladies, about the way her blue dress matched her blue eyes.

Ken himself was on the other side of Greenway. He placed his napkin across his knees, determining that he would never talk to ladies like that, but Nell seemed to like it. She smiled and chatted with Mr. Greenway so charmingly, and smoothed the blue silk dress over her bosom. Ken glanced across the table at Carey and met her eyes. This embarassed him so he looked at Mrs. Palmer who sat next to her, at his father's right hand.

Ken answered almost grudgingly when they asked him more questions about his trip to the valley. They knew it all anyway. There was nothing more to tell.

The telephone jangled noisily and Rob went to answer it.

Rob returned and took his seat. "That was from Reuben Dale," said he with satisfaction. "He's got six sons, all fine horsemen and clever with ropes. He and two of his sons will go—they'll be over this evening to talk it over."

Gus had said he thought the wind would hold, and as long as it held the snow would not come. Perhaps not for several weeks yet. There was snow in the sky, plenty of it but not immediately threatening unless the wind dropped.

—WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS—

United States Ground Forces Sent Into Korea; Uneasy World Fears Crisis May Lead to New World War

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

KOREA WAR:

U. S. Fights

Eight days after the Communists of North Korea invaded United States sponsored South Korea the people of the democratic nations were breathing a little easier, with only an occasional shiver of fear sweeping down their spines.

Developments in the crisis, which could yet plunge the world into World War III, came quickly after the initial invasion.

Using tanks and planes which the southern forces lacked, the Communists swept through Seoul and within 12 miles of Suwon, important air base of South Korea.

The army of South Korea made stand after stand, but could not halt the Russian made tanks and planes used by the Communists. Within 48 hours after the opening attack South Korea was in a difficult position and for a time it appeared the invaders would sweep south with less and less opposition.

Then came the historical order of President Truman sending United States navy and air force units to the aid of South Korea. It was followed two days later with an order sending U.S. troops to the battle line.

Military operations developed quickly and with surprising efficiency. Observers throughout the world were astonished at the speed with which the United States got fighting forces into the field.

Following the President's first order, the air force in Japan and naval units in that area, were put under command of General MacArthur. The planes immediately attacked Communist troop concentrations, tanks and planes. The navy blockaded the Korean coast.

Within 24 hours after the second order, troops had landed in South Korea and were well on their way to the front.

Meanwhile, the South Korea army had rallied and established a temporary line along the Hon river. The Communist army crossed the river at one point and advanced toward Suwon.

General MacArthur has at his disposal in Japan four U.S. infantry divisions, consisting of 15,000 men each, a number of tanks and heavy guns. Whether or not he will use all of them depends upon developments within the next week or two, observers reported.

The military picture in Korea remains confused and the future depends almost entirely upon what the Russians decide to do in the way of aid to the North Korea army.

Responsible sources report American and South Korea forces, using tanks, planes and heavy guns which the United States will provide, should check and then drive out the Communists. Experience and material throws the advantage to the democracies—that is, if the Soviet Union decides not to take an active part in the affair.

MURDER:

Admits Arson

Newspaper readers throughout the country forgot the Korean crisis long enough to express horror over the confession of a 20-year-old Circleville, O., youth who admitted setting the Ringling Brothers circus fire in Hartford, Conn., in 1944 that killed 168 persons and injured 412 others.

The youth, Robert Dale Segree, also admitted that he was personally responsible for the slaying of four persons.

The youth admitted setting between 25 and 30 major fires in Portland, Me., between 1939 and 1946 and other fires in New Hampshire and Ohio.

He confessed killing a watchman who caught him setting a fire in a warehouse in Portland, Me., March 16, 1943; a 12-year-old-boy, strangled to death on the beach at Cape Cottage, Me., in 1943; a 9-year-old girl, beaten to death with a stone during a fit of anger, and a Japanese boy, killed in Japan in 1949 while Segree was in the United States army of occupation.

Segree gave this explanation of the fires:

A flaming red Indian horseman awakens him at night and tells him to set the fires. Then his mind goes blank and the next thing he remembers is that the fires have been started. The red Indian then is off his horse. He drives Segree away with taunts and sneers.

RAILROADS:

Strike Goes On

The government asked striking A.F.L. switchmen to end their walkout against five midwest and western railroads because of the "current critical developments" arising from the Korean war, but the railroaders refused.

They offered to help the railroad move any material the government deemed essential. The union said the reference to patriotism "borders on insult."

Red Amazons

These poker-faced girls, held at a South Korea guardhouse, were members of a Communist guerrilla band that crossed the border and which was finally driven back. The girls said they were conscripted as guerrilla fighters when they proved too weak to help pull plows.

EUROPE:

A Case of Shakes

Europe suffered a severe case of "shakes" following the outbreak of the Korean conflict. Europeans saw the horrors of World War II as it progressed across that continent from east to west, and what they saw will not soon be forgotten.

With this memory and a strong belief that Russia had finally come from behind the iron curtain to fight World War III, the nerves of Europeans were at the breaking point for the first week of the crisis.

As the situation developed, however, the tension eased, but by no means vanished. In many areas, Berlin for instance, the majority felt World War III had begun. In other sections the thought persisted that it was a dangerous situation, but with hopes it would not set the world afire with war.

Some of the reactions:

Vienna—Austrians were beginning to breathe easier after the first week of war jitters, but there remained widespread fear of war. There was a notable surge of growing confidence in the United Nations and the United States.

Frankfurt—The Germans, both east and west, were plainly scared at the possibility of the Korean struggle drawing Europe into a shooting war.

Berlin—War fears in Berlin apparently were worse than at the start of the Soviet blockade of Berlin two years ago.

London — Extremely disturbed over the possibility of war, but approved the action of the United States. The thought persisted that the Russians are not ready for a full scale war.

UNITED STATES:

A United Front

More than anywhere else in the world, the Korean incident was uppermost in the minds of Americans. There was a great fear of war in all sections of the country. But most surprising reaction was the united front presented to the rest of the world.

Americans in every walk of life approved of President Truman's action. One and all approved the decision that told communism that the United States would stand by its commitments and the point had been reached where democracy would make a stand against totalitarianism.

Even congress, which has presented a confusing picture of inconsistencies during the Truman administration, approved of the chief executive's action.

Senator Taft of Ohio, apparently unwilling to rise above the political view took the opportunity to demand the resignation of Secretary of State Acheson. Many observers found his senate speech untimely. He demanded the resignation of Acheson on the grounds his policy in the Far East had been reversed completely by President Truman and he had, therefore, been operating under the wrong policy. For that reason he insisted Mr. Acheson had outlived his usefulness.

Rep. Vito Marcantonio, noted for his Communist leanings, added his voice of protest, but most people were inclined to consider the source and let it go at that.

Politics

A new movement was seen in the Republican party following a meeting in Philadelphia of representatives from 10 states and issuance of a "declaration of principles."

Henry V. Poor, former president of the New York Young Republicans, said the group drafted the "declaration of principles" as a basis of "revitalizing the Republican party."

England and America are two countries separated by the same language.

An Englishman does everything on principle: he fights you on patriotic principles; he robs you on business principles; he enslaves you on imperial principles.

Small Favor

A tramp entered a drugstore and asked for five cents worth of insect powder. The clerk paid no attention to him, and he repeated his request. "Say," said the clerk, "do you think I've got nothing else to do but waste time wrapping up five cents worth of insect powder?" "Who said anything about wrapping it up?" asked the tramp, and added, pulling out his collar, "All I want you to do is shake it down me neck."

Hoot, Mon

A Londoner was visiting an American friend who lived in the suburbs of a large city in the United States. One evening the two men went for a walk, and while passing through a wooded area heard a strange hooting sound. "What's that?" queried the Londoner. "Oh, just and owl," replied his friend. "A what?" asked the Londoner. "An owl," his friend repeated. "Yes, I know it's an 'owl," said the Londoner, "but what I'm wondering is what's 'e 'owling at?"

Dear friends at home,

Now that I am settled and actually have some extra time on my hands, I am going to sit down and write to you. Many of you have been wondering about my trip and about the country of Venezuela. I trust that I will be able to answer some of your questions in this letter.

I had a wonderful trip from New York to Maracaibo, Venezuela on a Dutch boat, the MS Poseida. I was the only passenger on board ship, in fact, the only woman. Everyone from the officers to the servants were very kind and courteous and did everything to make my trip enjoyable. The ocean was calmer than usual according to the captain, so the trip was very restful. I felt unusually well for being a passenger, and was able to eat all my meals at the table.

We reached Maracaibo on April 8th. The ship anchored a short distance from shore until the customs officials and the doctor from the city came and made the necessary check-ups. I was happy when they told me I could go to shore in the motorboat rather than wait for the ship to pull in, but I was rather bewildered when I found no one to meet me. By the help of some Dutch officials who spoke broken English, I was able to find the Mission headquarters. The missionaries had enquired as to when the Poseidan would be coming to shore, and had planned to be there then to meet me. I should have waited, but I guess the experience did me good.

The first thing I noticed was the terrific heat (about 90°). You can imagine what that felt like after coming from the cold Northland. There were people every where, and it seemed that every one was staring at me. I could not make out a word they were saying as everyone spoke Spanish. It surely made me realize that I was a foreigner. Cars were speeding down narrow, overcrowded streets. There were no traffic lights or even stop signs. All pedestrians, except little children and old people, have to look out for themselves here.

During the two weeks that I stayed in Maracaibo, I checked my baggage through customs (by the way, I was not charged duty on any of my things—an answer to prayer), visited some of the near-by stations, and made arrangements for my trip to the mountains where I was to be stationed. On April 20th I left with two other missionaries for Merida where they were stationed. Crossing the mighty Andes mountains was a thrill. The hairpin curves average 200 to every 15 miles on the Andean highway. The higher we climbed into the clouds, the colder it got. I had to put on my winter coat before we reached the top.

I visited in Merida for a few days and then went on to Tovar, which is about a three-hour drive down the mountain from Merida. Now I have brought you to the place where I live, and where I will perhaps be living for two or more years, Lord willing. My partner, Annabelle Tippett from Illinois, and I are busy studying the language. A doctor here in Tovar teaches us. Our senior missionaries, Gertrude Olson and Mabel Hallner, have been a great help to us, as has also little seven year old Carmen Teresa, the Venezuelan girl who stays with them. The Spanish language is easy to read, which makes it possible for us to help out a lot with singing, even though we don't understand what we're singing.

Tovar is over 3,000 feet above sea level so even if it is nearer the equator than Maracaibo, it is much cooler. During the day, the sun is hot, but in the shade it is very comfortable. The nights are cool, and we always use a woolen blanket for sleeping. There are mountains on all sides which makes the scenery gorgeous.

We like our house very much. All the houses here are made of mud, but you would never know it. Water paints are used for the outsides of the houses. Some are white, while others are brightly colored. Ours is blue. At home the houses are usually built in the center of the yard. Here the houses are built around the yard (patio in Spanish). We like the set-up very much as it gives us more privacy. The people are very curious, and think nothing of stopping before an open door or window and observing what is going on inside. All of our meals are eaten out in the open, or rather on the porch or corridor which surrounds the patio.

The native food is good, and I surely am thankful that it agrees with me so well. You might be interested to know that we have a number of banana trees in our back yard and have bananas on hand all the time. We also roast and grind our own coffee. Gertrude is an expert at that, and we call her coffee the "Olson Brand."

Venezuela has been called the "land of contrast" and rightly so. The wealthy people live in beautifully designed homes; the poor live in straw-thatched huts. Some people dress as nicely as wealthy Americans; other wear ragged clothes and worn sandals (that is if they have anything on their feet at all. Some are immaculate about their person; others are filthy. It is nothing to visit a country home and find pigs, dogs, chickens and cats in the house.

You have had floods in the homeland. We have had floods here, too. During the heavy rains that we had a short time ago the small community of LaPlaya about five miles from here was practically ruined. Water rushed down the mountain side, carrying with it large boulders and smaller rocks. These clogged the river and caused it to change its course. As a result the water washed away large fields of sugar cane and other crops which were the only source of income that some of these poor mountain people had. The force of the water was so strong that it even washed down a small hut and killed the people inside. We were very thankful to God that our chapel in LaPlaya, which is the only evangelical chapel in the state of Media, was untouched by the flood, though it was practically surrounded with water.

If there are those of you who would like to receive my form letter which I send out each quarter, I would appreciate it if you would drop me a line and tell me. Many of you are receiving it, but there may be those of you whose names I do not have on my list who may be interested.

I am very happy to be here and am longing for the day when I will be able to speak to the peoples about Jesus Christ and His wonderful salvation.

Sincerely yours,
Norma Sollom

Mung Bean

China's mung bean, source of the tender sprouts that make chop suey and other oriental dishes exotic, achieved commercial importance as an American crop during World War II. Grown almost exclusively in Oklahoma, it reached a production peak of 24,200,000 pounds in 1945. Demand has lessened since the war, with the result that the 1949 harvest was one-third that of 1945.

From where I sit... by Joe Marsh

There it Was—Right in The Middle!

Easy Roberts mowed his lawn early last Saturday. Then he sat on the porch, and watched Handy Peterson cutting his grass.

The Roberts' property and the Peterson's border each other—with no hedge or fence between them. So, when Easy notices Handy had left about a four-foot strip unmowed along the boundary, he walks over and asks why.

"That's your land," says Handy. "Mine ends here. See, it lines up with that oak tree across the road!" Easy didn't think so, so they went up and down looking for the surveyor's marker. Where did they find it? Right in the middle of their "no man's land!"

Well, they both grin and take turns finishing the job and then retreat to Easy's for a friendly glass of beer together. From where I sit, a little searching around for the truth of the matter often shows that the other fellow is as much right as you are—at which point the whole thing doesn't seem as important anyway.

Why your school taxes haven't gone even higher

AN ISSUE OF INTEREST to every Minnesota taxpayer was recently discussed by the Stillwater Post Messenger. Wrote its editor, Alvin Serkland: "We need to face the fact that in the development of taconite (or inferior grade) iron ore deposits, this state has its greatest future in iron mining. We need to slant our regulation and taxing on that basis. This is true because we do need the iron ore industry in the state. Its passing would leave a hole in our economy . . ."

Serkland

NO DOUBT YOU'D AGREE that Minnesota needs its iron ore industry. But have you any idea what this industry really means to you as a taxpayer? Do you know, for instance, how it helps keep your own school taxes from soaring still higher?

Over the years, iron ore has helped mightily to build up two trust funds which today provide important financial support every year to the primary and secondary schools of every single Minnesota county. Indeed, over 3 out of every 4 dollars of the permanent school and swamp land trust funds came from iron ore taxes and royalties on iron ore.

Total Distribution $3,674,076.99

To date the iron ore industry has contributed $113 million to these permanent trust funds. But that's only a small fraction of the TOTAL tax revenue Minnesota has gotten from iron ore. All told, Minnesota's iron ore industry has paid nearly three quarters of a billon dollars in taxes to state and local governments.

It's easy to see, Mr. Serkland, that Minnesota does need its iron ore industry. And a good way to make sure it will have this giant taxpayer and employer for generations to come is to refrain from taxing it to death. The iron ore producers want to pay their fair share of taxes. But they believe they should be taxed at the same rates as other Minnesota taxpayers—instead of the far higher rates they now pay.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that Trost Attends Hearing in Wash.

Marshall County Attorney A. A. Trost has returned to Warren after appearing before Congressional committees in Washington to appeal for passage of Red River Valley flood relief and reconstruction legislation.

Attorney Trost appeared before the Public Works Committee of both House of Representative and the Senate.

Up for hearing before the House committee were general major disaster bills introduced by Representative Harold C. Hagen of Minnesota's Ninth District and Rep. Usher Burdick of North Dakota.

In the second bill up for hearing, Representative Hagen asked for $30,000,000 or such amount as may be needed to cover flood damage. This appropriation provides for necessary reconstruction work in the flood areas as well as the building of necessary road dikes and levees.

County Attorney Trost used a large colored map of the flood area to explain to the committee members how the ridge that runs through Marshall County accounts for the two flooded districts within the county.

Trost gave a detailed report of the flood damages in the county and then told the committees: "Floods in former years have greatly reduced our county finances. This years floods have put us in a position that we can't meet without help from someplace!"

At the conclusion of his testimony, Trost presented a set of photographs to the committee so they could more graphically see the damage caused by the floods. Representative Hagen, in his remarks at the opening of the meeting, told the committee: "Our recent Red River Valley flood has has been a national disaster - one of the worst disasters in history. Counties, town ships, the smaller cities and villages are now unable to bear the cost of reconstruction by themselves, the congressman said. "Repetitious floods year after year have left these local governing bodies with considerable debts".

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

UN Flag Ordered Flown In Korea; Gen. MacArthur Named Commander Of International Forces in Area

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

UNITED NATIONS:

Fights Aggression

There are moments in the march of current events that make history. In the eyes of many political observers such a moment occurred recently when Secretary General of the United Nations, Trygve Lie, picked up the three by five-foot blue and white UN flag and handed it to Warren R. Austin, chief U. S. delegate to the UN, and asked him to send it to General Douglas MacArthur.

The Security Council had just authorized the UN flag be flown alongside national standards in operations against the Red Korean invaders.

And as he handed the flag to Austin, he said:

"Bring it back when the job is done."

On these words hinge the hopes of the free world. Observers saw in them a belief that the United Nations efforts in Korea will be successful and at last a world organization has been formed that will endure and protect the minorities for generations to come.

Observers were particularly impressed because it climaxed firm and positive action by the community of nations to secure world peace.

Up to this point the United Nations had:

(1) Demanded the withdrawal of Communist invaders from South Korea.

(2) Quickly endorsed the United States action of sending aid to South Korea and called upon all members of the United Nations to render assistance to carry out the police action against the Communists.

(3) Appointed General MacArthur commander of international forces in Korea.

The historic flag which Lie handed to Ambassador Austin was the one that flew over the headquarters of Dr. Ralph Bunche during his successful mediation of the Arab-Israeli war. It is the visible symbol of the first military sanctions ever levied against an aggressor by a world organization.

THAT SMELL:

Not The Russians

Four towns in Illinois and three in Iowa provided the nation with a chuckle, but it was not funny at the time at least to residents of those towns.

A foul smell crept through Moline, East Moline, Selvis and Rock Island, Ill., and then spread across the border into Muscatine, Bettendorf and Davenport, Iowa.

Some residents went into hysterics, one man insisted to Selvis police that "the Russians are flying over and gassing us," citizens were forced from their beds and from taverns, police switchboards were jammed with calls and firemen kept on a near-emergency basis. Scores of Moline residents jumped into their cars and drove in their night clothes to high ground and fresher air.

When the excitement died down investigation disclosed the odor resulted from a leak in a tank of entalarm being hauled through the area on a truck headed west. Entalarm is an odorant used to inject a smell of natural gas, normally odorless, to permit detection of leaks. It is not injurous but can cause nausea.

REORGANIZATION:

New Plan Killed

President Truman's plan to create a new department of health, education and security has been killed by the house. It was, incidentally, the first time this session the house has rejected a reorganization plan. The senate has killed six.

The house adopted, 249 to 71, a resolution of disapproval of the measure. It was killed apparently by opponents who argued it would be a step toward "socialized medicine."

Democrats who supported the plan, however, denied it had any bearing on socialized medicine. They said only congress could bring this about by passing necessary legislation.

RETAIL PRICES:

Up Another Notch

The Korean situation was not the only worry of Americans during the past week or so. Living costs went up another notch with the prices of meat and bread being increased in retail stores.

Cocoa, coffee, sugar, hides and tin continued upward, cotton soared to $15 a bale, and cattle went to the highest price level in a year. It is all blamed on the Korean war, but other factors entered in.

UN Flag

The blue and white flag of the United Nations has been sent to Korea to be flown by troops battling the Communist invaders from North Korea. Gen. Douglas MacArthur has been named commander in chief of the United Nations forces.

KOREA:

The Tide Flows

Military observers, still watching the Soviet Union for any signs of open participation in the Korean war, were of the opinion the tide has begun to flow—against the aggressors.

During the first two weeks of the conflict South Korean and American troops, acting under orders of the United Nations, took a beating. But as the battle went into the third week, American arms—guns, tanks and planes—and U.S. soldiers stemmed the rush of the Communist armies.

At a point some 50 to 60 miles south of Seoul, capital of South Korea which fell into the hands of the invaders a few days after the sneak attack, American and Communist troops met.

At first American troops were forced to withdraw before Red tanks. And at the moment when it seemed the invaders might break through again, U. S. big guns and tanks, plus fresh foot soldiers poured into the area. The attack was stopped and many observers believe the counter attack will come as the stream of supplies increase.

A big factor in the blunted Communist attack was the U. S., British and Australian air forces. Fighters and bombers carried out continuous attacks upon tanks, roads, and bridges. They ripped open Communist positions with low flying rocket and machine gun attack. The big bombers blasted away at supply lines and communication centers. Their blows were felt by the invaders and will spearhead the inevitable counter attack.

Meanwhile, American divisions within the United States were being readied to move to the Far East. General MacArthur had, at the beginning of the conflict, four divisions in Japan. He has already drawn upon them and troops within the country will replace those from Japan plus reinforcements for the battle area.

TRUTH CAMPAIGN:

Counteract Propaganda

For years Communist propaganda has been spread around the world, but no one seems to know just how much of the story of democracy has reached the enslaved peoples of the world. Now the state department has announced plans for "a great campaign of truth" to counter Moscow's broadsides of propaganda against the United States and other democratic nations.

Secretary of State Acheson told about the plan in testimony before a senate foreign-relations subcommittee. General Eisenhower also testified before the committee, declaring, "Truth could almost be classified as our T-bomb (truth-bomb) in this warfare."

General Marshall, who also testified, said he is firmly convinced that "we must confine ourselves to the truth" and that we must meet the Soviet procedure in what is called their conquest of the minds of people.

Acheson told the senators the Communist campaign of vilification "jeopardizes the security of the United States and is a threat to the security of the free world."

"The cynical aggression of communism in Korea, and the falsehoods that have preceded and accompanied it, make inescapably clear the importance of the campaign of truth," he said.

Economy

Economically the nation seemed in much better condition as the labor department reported signs pointing to record-breaking employment this year, exceeding the 1948 peak of 61,600,000.

Secretary Tobin said much of the nonagricultural employment gain stemmed from seasonal activities, intensified especially in the construction industry which is enjoying record-breaking activity.

MANPOWER:

Draft in Effect

The recently enacted draft law has been put into effect. President Truman ordered an expansion of the fighting forces in view of the Korea situation through enlistment or the draft.

Immediately after the President's order, spokesmen for the army, navy and air forces said they would be happy to get all their required manpower through enlistments alone if possible. Whether or not enlistments will fill the armed forces needs will be determined within the next two weeks.

Just how much the armed forces will be expanded has been kept secret. Presumably it could run as high as 547,482 men, bringing the services to 2,005,882.

There is also the possibility that reserves will be called up, although spokesmen for the services said none will be ordered to duty at present without their consent.

A spokesman for the Pentagon said the enactment of the draft law was necessary to meet "the situation in Korea," and "constitutes a first step to build up to full operating strength the units of the army, navy and air force to be used in the Korean operation, to provide further maintenance and support therefor, and to replace units to be moved to Korea."

Just how far the United States will go in building up its forces depends entirely upon developments in the Far East and other danger points, military observers reported.

RAILROADS:

Strike and Crash

Two items of railroad news were in the public mind, one bad and one good.

The AFL switchmen's union agreed to end its strike against four midwest and western railroads. The fifth continued its walkout, but returned to work after President Truman ordered the army to take over.

The switchmen made no bones about why they were calling of the strike. As they put it, we are calling it off "because of the threat of direct governmental action."

Truman had scored again. The day before he had told his weekly press conference at Washington that the union had better halt the strike or else. Evidently the union didn't like that "or else."

On the bad side, two high speed Santa Fe railway streamliners streaking eastward side by side, one traveling at 90 miles an hour and the other seventy, bumped midsections in a freakish accident. Nine dead and 75 injured were carried from the twisted metal cars in the Illinois collision.

JUMPING JACK:

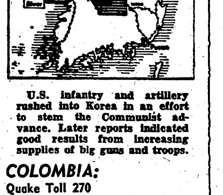
Sets Chute Record

Sgt. John (Jumping Jack) Sweitch set out to break the world's record parachute leaps in a single day, which he did with 107 drops. If he proved anything else it was the fact the human body will take a lot of punishment and that some people seem to get pleasure out of risking their necks.

The sergeant, with the aid of his buddies of the 82nd Airborne Division, made 107 drops in 10 hours, an average of one every six minutes. He twisted his ankle and sprained his knee on the 51st jump and slowed down long enough to have his leg taped. After each jump, a jeep and a pickup truck met him. The jeep rushed him back to the Piper Cub plane which took him aloft again, while the truck took his chutes to the hangar where his six buddies were kept busy repacking them.

The sergeant's only complaint during the endurance test was he would be all right "if he could survive the jeep rides."

Korea



U.S. infantry and artillery rushed into Korea in an effort to stem the Communist advance. Later reports indicated good results from increasing supplies of big guns and troops.

COLOMBIA:

Quake Toll 270

Five successive earthquakes in Colombia, some 200 miles northeast of Bogota, are reported to have killed 270 persons, injured some 500, and left 40,000 homeless.

Ten towns in north central Colombia were reported destroyed with property damage estimated at approximately $20,700,000.

Additional damage and loss of life may be revealed when a final survey of the area is made.

Facts About Rabies

Rabies is a virus disease that affects the brain and central nervous system. It is transmitted by direct contact, nearly always through the bite of an infected animal. Human beings and all warm-blooded animals are susceptible to it. There are ways of preventing it, by vaccination before exposure or by treatment immediately after exposure to the virus, but once an animal or person actually develops rabies, there is nothing that can be done to prevent death—no medical treatment of any kind.

Catch Greasy Pigs

There's no prize for catching these greased porkers, but it's the smart thing to do. Hogs with a greasy look are likely to be suffering from "sulpestifer infection." It is a germ-caused disease that is responsible for one form of swine enteritis. Infected animals spread it to others if allowed to stay on the loose.

Cologne Cathedral

Cologne Cathedral, located in Cologne, Germany, has been called the most beautiful Gothic cathedral in the world. Twenty-one generations of men, from fathers to great-grandsons, labored more than six hundred years to build this famous church.

Easy Fish Sauce

Add very finely cut green onion or chives, celery, carrot and green pepper to mayonnaise. Blend in horseradish to suit your taste. Prepare several hours in advance for sauce to "ripen." Serve a spoonful in green pepper ring with each portion of fish.

Avoid Thick Films

The wrinkling of paint is caused by applying too thick a coat. The surface dries quickly but there is an undried portion underneath. As the underpart dries and contracts, the top surface wrinkles. This can be avoided by adding thinner to paint which has become over-thick (about one-half pint to the gallon) or by applying plenty of elbow grease and brushing out the paint to avoid thick films.

Saving Pigs

A new method of management which has helped in saving more pigs per litter has been the use of the sloping floor in individual hog houses. The floor is sloped from front to back about one inch per foot. The theory is that the pigs will stay on the uphill side of the house and there is less chance of the sow lying on them.

Most Important Road

The highest road in the world is in the Peruvian Andes. The longest is the old Silk road in central Asia. The finest is the Appian Way. The most heavily traveled is between New York and Philadelphia. But the most important road in all the world is the road that passes by one's own door.

Knots and Knotholes

In structural grades, from the standpoint of strength, no distinction need be made between knots and knotholes. Tests at the Forest Products laboratory of the United States forest service have shown that intergrown knots reduce strength fully as much as loose knots or knotholes.

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

Through continued association with Carey, whom he finds wholly delightful, Ken learns how much she is dominated by her grandmother, Mrs. Palmer, who uses a feigned invalidism as a weapon to insure Carey's continued presence near her. Ken tells Carey how sorry he is that his stallion, Thunderhead, made off with Crown Jewel, and promises to get the filly back for her. A scene with her grandmother highlights the elder woman's imperious attitude toward Carey. Mrs. Palmer frowns on Nell's suggestion that Carey might like to take rides about the ranch, pointing out that Carey's music practice is bound to conflict.

CHAPTER VI

Now the wind had dropped. Rob and Greenway, too, kept turning to look out the window. The lowest layer of clouds which had been grey were now crimson and edged with gold, and behind them were swirling depths of fiery color, changing in hue every minute.

"But the wind always drops at sunset," said Nell, "and then it rises again in the evening or during the night."

"Well—everything depends on the weather," Rob kept saying.

"I can imagine you are a fine weather prophet, Mr. McLaughlin," said Mrs. Palmer archly.

Rob glanced at her, "After all these years, I ought to be!"

"I wish I go could go along on the search," said Carey wistfully.

Nell answered, "At any rate, Carey, you must have some riding while you are here."

Mrs. Palmer's face lost its expression of affibility. "She has no riding clothes with her."

"Oh, but we have plenty," said Nell. "That closet under the stairs is just full of old boots of all sizes and blue jeans and riding pants. She'll easily find something that fits her."

"I think," began Mrs. Palmer, "that with strange horses—" but Mr. Greenway interrupted.

"A swell idea! We'll ride together, Carey, you and I, while the rest of them go off on the horse-hunt. It'll be like being at the Blue Moon together, won't it?" He turned to Nell. "Carey and I ride together often."

"Carey rides very well," conceded Mrs. Palmer, "but her greatest talent is her music. She practices two hours every day."

Everyone at the table looked at Carey with new interest. This caused her no embarrassment.

"I see that you have a fine piano here. After dinner," said Mrs. Palmer, "Carey will play to you."

"Do you groom your own horse?" asked Howard.

Carey shook her head. Her grandmother, with a flash of her dictatorial spirit, answered for her, "I do not like her to be in the stables."

"Wouldn't do her a bit of harm," grumbled Greenway, "no use in wrapping a child up in cotton wool."

"Carey is not strong," said Mrs. Palmer firmly.

"Oh, Grandma, I'm all right. I'm never sick."

As if amazed at this contradiction, Mrs. Palmer looked angrily at her granddaughter. Carey's cheeks were flushed, her eyes bright. She was looking, not at her grandmother but, eagerly, first at one of the boys, then at the other.

Mrs. Palmer began to cough violently. As the paroxysms continued, all conversation ceased and she became the center of attention. Rob offered her a glass of water. Carey half rose out of her chair and looked at her anxiously, "Is it your asthma, Grandma? Shall I get the medicine?"

Mrs. Palmer emerged from her napkin smiling, waving them back to their seats, apologizing. She made Ken feel uncomfortable. What was it that kept everybody fussing about her?

Ken Explains Hard Life of Wild Stallion

Nell suggested that Carey and Ken ride out to the highway with Howard and then walk back.

They got into the new Studebaker which was standing on the hill behind the house. Howard took the wheel, Carey and Ken sat in the back. Howard watched Carey in the little mirror over the windshield. She looked at him, now and then smiling. Ken noticed this and fell silent, sitting morosely in the corner. At the highway they got out and walked slowly back together.

"Oh, I love the wind!" cried Carey, spreading her arms wide and running before it. Ken grasped one of her hands and they ran down the road together.

A big jackrabbit leaped out of the brush, sailing on the wind with long jumps, and Carey stopped short. "Oh, look! I thought it was a deer!"

"Look over there," said Ken.

She gave a scream of excitement. "What is it? Where? Is it Jewel?

She shook her head and pointed. She saw the three deer then, feeding quietly by the stream and near them, a black colt grazing. Ken went to the barbed wire fence and whistled a soft, far-carrying trill. Deer and colt raised their heads, then the deer resumed feeding and, as Ken continued to whistle, the colt came to the fence.

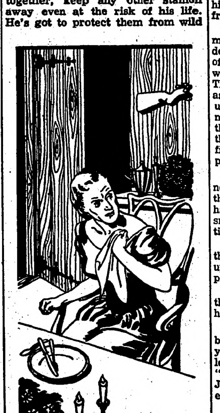
"This is WhoDat," said Ken, stroking the colt's face.

Carey laughed at the name, and Ken told her how it had come to be given to the foal who, on the day of his birth, had lost his mother in a blizzard.

"It's a wonder we raised him, but he's a beauty. He's going to be our stud when he's old enough. He gets special feeding and care."

"But what about Banner?" asked Carey, who when she had first arrived at the ranch that afternoon, had been taken with her uncle by Rob to the pasture to see Banner and his mares and colts.

"Banner's getting old and tired," said Ken. "A strange stallion has tremendous responsibilities, you know. He has to care for the mares on the range, keep the band together, keep any other stallion away even at the risk of his life. He's got to protect them from wild animals and guide them to good food and shelter and water. Dad says it would take two or three cowboys, working day and night, to give the mares and colts as fine care as one good range stallion."



Mrs. Palmer emerged from her napkin.

"I never knew stallions could do all that."

For a moment they were silent. Then Ken said abruptly, "I wish it was the beginning of the summer instead of the end."

"Why?"

When Ken stammered, "Well, d-d-don't you see, you're here now, and if it was the beginning of the summer you c-c-could stay and—" Carey caught embarrasment from him and ducked her head, her brown hair fell forward and Ken could see nothing of her eyes except the straight up-tilted brows and the full smooth lids and dark lashes.

A car whizzed past on the road. Ken looked after it. "That's Reuben Dale. I bet he's going up to talk to Dad about going after Jewel."

Carey jumped up. They did not want to miss any of the talk and planning. They hurried to the house.

Fourteen men were to go on the search. This included Ross Buckley. Gus and Wink and Tim could not be spared. Howard and Ken were to go, but had to be back at the ranch by September eleventh whether or not the search was successful, for they were to leave on the twelfth for school.

All evening, cars drove up to the ranch house. The living-room gradually filled with tall weather-beaten men in boots and spurs. Outside there was the blustering wind and the clashing of trees, and strange noises, like voices, around the chimneys. Inside was the crackling of logs in the stone fireplace and Rob's deep, harsh voice explaining and planning and an occasional word or short question from one of the men. They seemed to communicate with each other by monosyllables and glances and silence.

Carey Begins Worrying Over Fate of Jewel

Reuben Dale was there with two of his six strapping sons, all fine horsemen and clever with ropes.

Crosby had finished his haying and he and his two hired men would go. Others had been reached by relayed messages, the country grapevine, which, as effectually as the South African's mysterious method of disseminating news, had spread the knowledge of this interesting event over the countryside.

And the men were glad to go. Work or no work, they would snatch at any excuse to get away from the monotony of their daily routine.

The men preferred hard wood to soft cushions, sheering away from these almost in alarm, so when the supply of chairs gave out, they found seats on wood-box, piano bench, or tables, while the davenport was occupied by Mrs. Palmer and Nell with Carey between.

Rob was particulary pleased that he had got Milt Norcross to go on the search. Milt was an old man, but then, he always had been. He never shaved, and little of his face could be seen between the thatch above his eyes and the whiskers below.

A message came in over the telephone which created a stir. It was from Joe Daly. His boy, Buck, had been able to follow the trails of Thunderhead, Jewel, and Pete, through the Buttes. Then they had headed west, and only three miles away joined up with a band of eight other horses.

"Gosh!" exclaimed Ken, "he had his band of mares not three miles from where we were!"

Daly's boy said the band was moving west, straight toward the desert-like expanse of country south of Laramie. If they kept on, they would end up in the Snowy Range. They were moving slowly, grazing as they went. Also, near the Monument which commemorated the massacre of a troop of cavalry by the Shoshone Indians, he had found the filly's blanket coat, torn and filthy. Looked as if it had been ripped by the stallion's teeth.

Gus said thoughtfully, "There's no water in that country. Not till they get near the mountains. They'll have to start moving fast—unless snow comes. We shouldn't lose no time."

But Carey was thinking of something different. She started to get up. Her grandmother's hand pressed her knee. "Sit still, dear."

"I just want to ask Collins something," said Carey urgently, and her grandmother let her rise.

Carey sat down on the piano bench on the other side of Collins—young Georgie Dale, blushing scarlet, rising to make room for her. "Collins, will she catch cold? Jewel, I mean, without her blanket?"

Collins made one of his weary and discouraged gestures. "Gawd knows, Miss. She's wore'er blanket hall the trip hout, hin'er crate, hin the hexpress car. Now she's aht hin the wilds with nuthin hon!" He shook his head.

"Out in the wilds with nothing on," repeated Carey in a wondering murmur as this picture unfolded itself to her mental vision. And suddenly Jewel looked not like a filly but like a little naked, shivering girl.

Ken came over to them. "What's that you said, Collins? Do you think she'll catch cold?"

"She's never 'ad a cold hin 'er life, but wot's 'appenin' to 'er naow runnin' abaht with hall them wild beasts hin Greenland's hicy mountings, 'oo can sye?"

Beaver Plans Journey To Include Carey

Several of the men went out on the terrace to inspect the weather. Collins joined them and Ken sat down on the piano bench beside Carey.

"Ken!" called Rob.

Ken woke out of a dream and leaped to his father. "Yes, sir!" Carey followed and stood behind him.

"Gus is going to pick up these fellows' nags at daybreak tomorrow and load them into the truck and drive them to the Monument. Howard will take the men in the station wagon. You'll take the saddles and equipment in the pick-up. Set your alarm for three o'clock."

"Yes, sir."

"Oh, Ken!" Ken heard the soft whisped behind him and turned to look into Carey's face. "I wish girls could do things like that! I wish I could go along!"

Mr. Greenway heard the remark and turned to put his arm around Carey.

"You couldn't," said Ken, "not just one girl with a lot of men."

Greenway suddenly took Ken and Carey, one by each arm, and drew them away from the crowd. There was a larky conspiratorial expression on his face that intrigued both of the youngsters. "Carey, how would you like to drive out with Ken in the pick-up to the Monument—then come back with Gus in the truck?"

"But that's just what I said, Uncle Beaver! I'm just dying to!"

"Well, would you?"

She drew her breath in and squeezed her hands together. Her mouth opened and closed soundlessly, her whole face was ecstatic.

"Okay! Then we'll fix it."

Carey found words, almost horrified words, "But Uncle Beaver! Grandma would never, never let me!"

Funds Galore

The small son of a faculty member at Cleveland college trudged home from his first day at Sunday school and solemnly began emptying his pockets of money—quarters, dimes, nickels — while his parents stood by gasping.

Finally his mother shrieked, "Where did you get all that money?"

"At Sunday school," said the youngster, "They've got bowls of it down there!"

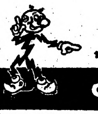
YOU HELPED TO SOLVE THIS PUZZLE!

Maybe you didn't realize it, but every time you turn on the radio or plug in the iron, you are aiding in our constant effort to provide LOWER cost electricity. Because it's YOUR use of electricity that makes our system of mass production possible . . . and mass production, through private enterprise, is the key to more and cheaper electricity for better living.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP MAY SOUND GOOD ON THE SURFACE . . .

. . . But it's no substitute for a tax-paying, self-supporting private power company such as ours, which last year paid $2,105,000 in local, state and federal taxes . . . and still provided electric service at rates 10 per cent lower than ten years ago.



Your electric company -- a development of free enterprise through private initiative -- is your best source of low-cost electricity.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Take Your Choice

Sitting around last Friday evening, the talk turned to the best way of getting to sleep when it seems you just can't. "The way I always do," says Sandy Johnson, "is to breathe deep and make believe I weigh a ton."

"Just throw away the pillow—it works every time," says Buzz Ellis. When counting sheep came up, right away was the question: What kind of sheep?

From where I sit, you could argue 'til Doomsday and never get complete agreement on a lot of things. Now, take me. I'm all for having a glass of beer or ale on occasion. Your "sociable beverage" may be a "Coke"—or buttermilk or maybe a cup of hot coffee.

But enjoying our preferences is a right in this country and each of us is entitled to his own. The important thing is to respect that right in the true democratic spirit of understanding! As a matter of fact, what a tiresome old world this would be if we all did have the same likes and dislikes!

"We Farmers Profit with LAND O'LAKES"
. . . says A. O. MATTSON, Holdingford, Minn., Dairyman

"A man owes it to himself to think pretty hard about where to sell the milk from his farm," says Mr. Mattson. "After all, that's where a big share of our money comes from in this dairy country. So to get the best average returns, I sell my milk the co-op way. By marketing through our local LAND O'LAKES creamery—the Upsala Co-operative Creamery—I share in the proceeds. The profit goes to the farmer—and because farmers own LAND O'LAKES, we know we'll always get a square deal." If you sell milk, sell through LAND O'LAKES. Farmers testify that it pays!

Can any Minnesotan answer this question?

Mills

"NO ONE IN HIS RIGHT MIND doubts the value of the iron ore industry to the state," writes Everett Mills, editor of the Montevideo American. And commenting on iron ore taxes, he says: "It is doubtful if any person could determine just what would constitute a 'fair' tax. Somewhere is a version fair to all, but the question is to find it."

THAT'S SOME QUESTION, Mr. Mills! But even if no one Minnesotan could arrive at precisely the right iron ore tax, somehow the question must be answered. And if the people of this state really UNDERSTAND the iron ore issue—an issue that means much to them in jobs and tax revenue—chances are they'll come up with a just and reasonable ore tax policy.

Q. Will Minnesota run out of ore?

A. Not if we use what we have. True enough, our high-grade ore supply has melted considerably. But billions of tons of low-grade and taconite ores are still in the ground. These ores contain more waste and less iron per ton, but—after a costly manufacturing process—they can be made to yield a good iron ore product.

Q. How high are iron ore taxes?

A. Last year the ore industry's occupation and royalty tax bill was higher than the income taxes paid by all the manufacturing, wholesale and retail trade corporations in the state combined. In addition, it had to pay general property taxes on an assessed valuation of 50% of full and true value of its ore as compared with 40% in the case of other business corporations. This industry is taxed at a higher rate than any other large industry in the state. In fact, no other state taxes any natural resource as heavily as we tax iron ore.

Q. What's the employment picture?

A. Everybody wants range employment to stay high. But it can actually go far higher with full production of taconite. Reason: it takes twice the manpower to produce a ton of taconite concentrate, as opposed to the easier-to-get open-pit ores.

Q. What should Minnesota do?

A. Plainly, Minnesota has everything to gain by helping its iron ore industry expand operations. And the way to do it is to show the present producers that their industry will be treated as fairly as any other Minnesota industry. These producers quite naturally need to know that the great investments required for taconite production will not be threatened by ill-advised campaigns to "Soak the Mining Companies."

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

A FAIR DEAL FOR MINNESOTA'S IRON ORE MEANS A GOOD DEAL FOR YOU

Night Driving

The fact that three out of every five fatal accidents occur at night (with only 30 per cent of the driving occuring between dusk and dawn), indicates that darkness produces a new and dangerous set of driving conditions calling for less speed and more caution.

Increase Flax Yields for 1951

An easy, inexpensive way to increase flax yields is described by Dr. W. W. Brookins of the Flax Institute of the United States.

August working is the method advocated by Brookins. Farmers who sow flax on land prepared in this manner will increase their flax yields many seasons as much as two or three bushels per acre. Other crops which follow August working will also benefit, it has been demonstrated.

The success of August working is based on the fact that it offers effective control of many kinds of annual weeds.

"Grain stubble usually contains a large number of weeds," Dr. Brook explains. "As long as the crop is growing. weeds are held pretty much in check. Just as soon as it is cut. however, the weeds shoot up quickly and form seed. That's why it's so important to plow early, before these seeds have time to develop."

As soon as plowing is completed fields should be dragged or worked to break down clods and to encourage weed seeds already in the soil to sprout. The cooler weather which usually follows harvest is ideal for starting a harmless fall crop of weeds which will usually be killed by frost before they can go to seed. The land is thus left relatively free of weed seeds and in ideal condition for spring work.

Late fall plowing does little to control annual weeds, When plowing is delayed until mid-September and October, vast numbers of weed seeds are produced. By the time the land is worked it is too late for fall germination and the seeds will wait until next spring to do their damage.

"August working doesn't mean any extra work or extra cost", points out Dr. Brookins. "It is just a matter of timing. The land would have been worked sooner or later anyway, but the farmer who does the job early this summer can expect fewer weeds and more bushels in 1951."

Toughest Fight

Jack Sharkey, the ex-heavyweight champ, was in the Stork Club, where he said that his is the unique distinction of having fought both Jack Dempsey and Joe Louis. In reporting his financial returns for these fights, Sharkey brushed his left jaw and said: "Dempsey hit me there, with a $211,000 right," then touched his right jaw and said: "And Louis flattened me here, with a $36,000 left."

"Who gave you your toughest fight?" Sharkey was asked.

The gallant Bostonian paid the proper tribute. "My toughest fight was with my Old Lady."

—WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS—

American Troops Taking Beating In Korea; Mobilization of U. S. Manpower and Industry Forecast

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

KOREA:

GI's Take Beating

As the Korean battle went into the fourth week it became apparent to every American that U.S. troops were taking a beating.

They were outnumbered; tanks were inferior and too few; guns and bazookas could not pierce the 12-inch armor of the Russian made tanks. They were pinned to foxholes by tanks, artillery and mortars; overwhelmed by massed infantry, sniped at from the sides and rear by infiltrating columns.

Taejon, provisional capital of South Korea, was abandoned after the Kum river line was broken by thousands of fanatical Communists who charged American positions without regard to casualties. They overran first aid stations, killing patients and chaplains, and for every one the Americans killed, ten took his place.

American forces began a slow withdrawal which appeared would halt some 35 miles southeast of Taejon where a range of hills offered a natural defense position. Whether or not they held this position would depend upon reinforcements and the continued flow of guns, tanks, and ammunition.

No matter how optimistic a view an observer was inclined to take, the situation appeared serious. As has often been the case in the past, Americans greatly underrated North Korea's military strength and fighting determination.

Facts of the situation indicated: North Korea had 10 to 15 divisions —100,000 to 250,000 men, with replacements handy from the armies of Communist China when needed. At least 200 tanks, with replacements also available from Russia, and almost unlimited supplies behind the lines in Siberia and in Manchuria.

United States would need eight full divisions, perhaps 250,000 men. The inadequate supply of tanks and heavy artillery in the Pacific would have to be remedied.

The one bright spot in the picture was the work of the U.S. air force which had knocked out tanks, bombed and strafed troop concentrations and supply lines, and driven the North Korean planes from the air.

But military observers pointed out that air power will greatly increase the chances of victory, but the Korean war, as has been the case in all wars, will be won by the soldier who fights through mud and rain and cold and heat. The foot soldier has not been replaced with push-button warfare, as yet.

McCARTHY:

Called a Liar

Senator Joseph McCarthy, who has had more front-page publicity in the American press than any one man in a number of years, has made the front pages again, but not to his liking.

The senator, still screaming charges of communism in the state department, was called a liar by three Democratic members of a senate investigating subcommittee.

Reporting their conclusions from a four-month inquiry, they attacked the Wisconsin Republican in terms of harshness rarely used in the senate's history. They accused him of conscious falsehood and of serving the interests of the Communists by raising baseless suspicion among the people of the country.

They cleared every person McCarthy accused of being a Communist.

The Republican members of the subcommittee, Senators Hickenlooper and Lodge, declined to sign the report.

The Democrat members termed McCarthy's charges "a fraud and a hoax perpetrated on the senate of the United States and the American people."

Their report said, in part:

"They (McCarthy's charges) represent perhaps the most nefarious campaign of half truths and untruth in the history of this republic. For the first time in our history we have seen the totalitarian technique of the big lie employed on a sustained basis.

"The result has been to confuse and divide the American people, at a time when they should be strong in their unity, to a degree far beyond the hopes of the Communists themselves, whose stock in trade is confusion and division."

SOVIET UNION:

An Olive Branch

Although no official announcement has been made, it is believed in many quarters the Soviet Union has offered terms for settling the Korean war. It is a bloody and wilted branch the Russians are holding out to the United Nations.

After the sugar coating of diplomatic language is penetrated, it seems Russia would be willing to call off the affair after China is seated in the United Nations.

Korea Commander

Lt. General Walton H. Walker, a tank expert from Texas and commander of the Eighth Army, has been named to the top command post in Korea. Walker gained fame as commander of the 20th corps in Patton's Third Army.

MOBILIZATION:

Is It Near?

Many observers are wondering if complete mobilization of this country's manpower and industrial strength is in prospect for the near future? Some believe it is, unless the world situation takes a sudden and unexpected turn for the better.

Within a matter of hours after this writing, President Truman was expected to go before congress and outline for the American people steps deemed urgent to cope with the Korean war. He was also scheduled to speak over a nation-wide radio hookup and tell Americans just where we stand.

One official predicted the President would:

1. Request new military funds or contract authorizations totaling $5,000,000,000 to $6,000,000,000.

2. Propose legislation authorizing 160,000 more men for the army above the present legal limit of 837,000 and 60,000 more for the Navy, which now cannot exceed 666,882. An increase may also be ordered for the 502,000-man air force.

HOME FRONT:

Controls Likely

Observers on the home front are predicting limited controls to back up an intensified military campaign in Korea.

At this writing the controls had not been asked for, but observers pointed out that anti-inflationary action was becoming more urgent with each day. They predicted President Truman would ask for them within a very short time.

A request for higher taxes, to cover an expected jump in military spending, was held to be inevitable.

Government officials were predicting privately that President Truman would ask congress:

1. Power to allocate—by voluntary means, or more drastic measures if necessary—steel and a few other basic metals.

2. Authority to put quantity ceilings on the production of automobiles, television and radio sets and other civilian products consuming large quantities of metal, so that the demands of these industries will not interfere with arms production or create a "gray market" in prices.

3. Restoration of consumer credit controls. By tightening up on easy-payment credit for automobiles and other consumer goods, it is hoped that some of boom-level buying demand may be removed from the market.

LABOR:

Mobilization Urged

At least one labor leader, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, has demanded all-out preparedness for any eventuality, including mobilization of labor.

"We find ourselves facing a situation with the implication of a third world war . . . . If war is localized now, we know it is only a question of time until the inevitable happens. Only adequate preparedness can safeguard us," Green said.

He added: "We cannot send our soldier to the fighting front without training equipment and regular supplies . . . We must provide quick transportation which will increase mobility . . . . There will be no side lines secure from bombing . . . . There must be mobilization of labor."

Electoral College

In what observers believe to be one of the strangest line-ups in modern political history, the house killed, 210 to 134, the proposal that would have made a presidential election more nearly reflect the popular vote.

The senate approved the constitutional amendment last spring. The measure needed a two thirds vote. Had it passed, it would have needed approval by states.

YOUR NATIONAL FORESTS

180 Million Acres of U. S. Forests Offer Ideal Vacation Opportunity

Perhaps you haven't thought much about it, but some 180 million acres of national forest land are yours for the using this summer. That's a little more than an acre apiece and with few exceptions they are yours to use for free. Owned by Uncle Sam and administered by the Forest Service, these acres offer recreation and vacation opportunities unlimited.

You don't have to know an oak from a pine tree to enjoy one of the 4,500 camping and picnicking areas scattered from Maine to California. For most American families one of these sites, complete with fireplace and picnic table and benches, is within a day's driving distance of home. The areas will accommodate 280,000 people at one time, insuring plenty of elbow room unless you choose a very popular area near a large city during a long weekend.

The forests provide boundless activities. The 750 rangers managing the areas don't organize trips for you; they don't serve as guides. However, they are friendly men, ready to answer questions, direct you to points of interest, and make your visit a pleasant one.

Miles of Trails

If it's sittin' and eatin' you want, the ranger can tell you where to get the best scenery with your meals. But if it's rockin' you want with your sittin', you'll have to bring your own chair, or patronize one of the 50 privately owned and operated resorts on national forest land.

What you do in the forest is pretty much up to your individual taste. There are 136,000 miles of trails, forming in places a maze of foot and horse paths. In the west the Pacific Coast Trail system traverses the cascades of the Pacific northwest and the Sierras of California, north and south across the United States from Canada to Mexico. In the east the Appalachian Trail stretches more than 2,000 miles from Mt. Katahdin in Maine to Mt. Oglethorpe in Georgia.

Short trails leading to scenic points offer half-hour to half-day jaunts for the tired business man and his family. The more experienced woodsman can plan a backpack trip of several days' duration, camping nights at three-sided shelters usually spaced 10 to 15 miles apart in the East.

For those who want to hike unencumbered except for personal items, the Appalachian Mountain Club of Boston operates a chain of huts in the White Mountains of New Hampshire where one can bunk for the nights, get dinner and breakfast, and have a trail lunch put up at a reasonable rate.

The less adventuresome can join hiking clubs—the Sierra Club, the Obsidians, the American Alpine Club, the Appalachian Mountain Club or some of the smaller trail and mountain climbing clubs throughout the country. Many of these clubs run organized trips for members into the national forests.

Fine Fishing Offered

For rugged individuals the Forest Service has set aside 14 million acres of real wilderness. Untouched land preserved in its original state for future generations, these areas present a real challenge to those with a pioneer spirit.

No roads lead into these wilderness areas. You walk, ride horseback, or paddle your own canoe and carry grub and equipment to last you the length of your stay. You can be your own guide and your own cook.

On the national forests there are many swimming areas, 70,000 miles of streams for fishing, and 100 million acres of good hunting country. There are 120,000 miles of forest highways and roads for the motorist or bicyclist.

American designers are exerting a greater influence every day on the mode of living in this country. Their activities include everything from fishbait to huge industrial plants.

△ △ △

Designers Have Big Influence On Mode Of Modern Living

From the time you shut off the alarm clock in the morning until you flick off the reading light at night, literally everything man-made you use, touch and see is the result of the creative genius of a designer.

Think about what you use in the course of a day—your toothbrush, toaster, hat, car, pen, radio, typewriter—every implement, building, article of clothing was first a designer's dream.

Among the many types of designers . . . fashion, architectural, interior decorator, etc . . . the one which perhaps most influences our mode of living is the industrial designer. This man is artist, architect and engineer rolled into one. From his practical imagination, drawing board and models emerge the shape of things to come . . . our tools of living, from toys to heavy machinery. He, more than anyone, is concerned with your future comfort and joy of living.

Design for Comfort

One of the nation's foremost industrial designers is Dave Chapman of Chicago, vice-president of the national Society of Industrial Designers, who has fashioned some of the articles you use. Your own refrigerator, juicer, stove, washer, flashlight, clock, razor, coffee pot, hammer, fishing lure or sewing machine may be his design.

You probably aren't aware of it, but the myriad of things you take for granted are pleasant and satisfying because they are the right color, texture, weight and size. Why? Because before whatever the object may be was finally produced in the form you know it, a designer handled it, played with it, broke it, fixed it, tore it down, re-built it, tested it on countless others and lived with it until he was sure what you would like best. The designer eliminates all guesswork where your pleasure is involved. He knows what you will like.

Because his creations must be pleasing to millions, the industrial designer must be gifted with a super sixth sense. He has to know intuitively what will strike people, then work with engineers and production men in perfecting the product. Requisites for its success: look better; be more durable and efficient; be easier to keep and keep up; cost less than its competitors.

Important Field

Like most of his contemporaries, Chapman finds relaxation and inspiration in other arts. Some designers write, paint, do sculpture or compose music, in addition to their design. Chapman is an architect, recognized oil and water color painter, master black and white and color photographer, and collector of rare books and ethnic recordings.

As our culture progresses, our tastes grow finer, more exacting. We expect better and better things. So the industrial designer is growing in importance to our happiness. Your "crystal ball," revealing what you will use in the future, is the industrial designer's drawing board today. Right now, he's busy creating what you will use in 1955 and 1960.

26,000,000 Visited Forests Last Year

So long as you are considerate of others, leave the camping area clean, and are careful with fire, you can do pretty much as you please in the national forests. No salesman knocks at the tentflap or overtakes you on the trail. No alarm clock peals at an unearthly hour of the morning. You rise when you feel like it and go to bed likewise.

Last year Americans made 26,000,000 visits to the national forests. This year forest rangers expect even more people to get acquainted with their own backyards.

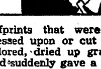
GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING



By Mary O'Hara

Howard, Ken's older brother, meets Carey again and the two become fast friends. He has met her once before on the train as they were both coming to the McLaughlin ranch. Ken and Carey discuss the ranch and Ken outlines for her how the ranch is operated and tells her about all the animals and their names. The plans for starting the search for Crown Jewel progress and it is decided that 14 men shall make up the search party. The hunt program is stimulated with a call from Joe Daly saying he knows the whereabouts of Crown Jewel and Thunderhead. After much persuasion, Carey gets permission to ride part way with the searching party.

CHAPTER VII

Greenway's face took on its intimate expression and he held her elbow tight. "Carey, by the time you get to be ten or twenty years older, there will be a few larks you can look back upon—things you did you weren't supposed to do, nights or early mornings when you skinned out and went gallivanting somewhere without anyone's knowing—everyone's entitled to that. I can look back on quite a few escapades of that sort and—tell you a secret —" he put his mouth close to Carey's ear, "your Granny can, too!"

Carey looked utterly shocked, "Oh, Uncle Beaver, I don't think so!"

"I'm tellin' you! And this will be one for you! A barrel of fun, and not a bit of harm."

Again Carey's breath lifted her breast in a great gasp. "But Uncle! I sleep with her in the same bed!"

"Didn't I hear that you were to set your alarm at three o'clock, Ken?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, your Grandma is a very heavy sleeper, Carey. Especially at three in the morning. You can slip out of bed, go to the bathroom, have your clothes there, dress there, and presto! What's to stop you?"

"Clothes!" gasped Carey, visualizing all this, "Oh, Uncle Beaver, may I really do it?"

"You not only may, but I insist upon it, and I'll have no disobedience."

"When we unload the horses," said Ken, "I'll give you a ride on Redwing."

Carey looked from one to the other completely carried away.

"Come on with me, "said Ken, "and we'll pick out some riding clothes for you, boots and pants, then you can stow them away in the bathroom."

"Give her a lumberjacket, Ken," said her uncle, "it's going to be mighty cold at three o'clock tomorrow morning."

"There's a black leather jacket there," said Ken. "Mother used to wear it. Lined with plaid wool."

The men were preparing to go. Rob handed every man a glass, and the bottle went from one to the other—some of the tumblers were filled to the brim.

Ken and Carey sat on the floor of the big closet under the elbow of the stairs. Piled about them were jackets and jodhpurs, boots, sweaters, bluejeans. Carey stood up and held one pair after the other against herself until one of the right length was found. She sat down, took off her shoes, tried the boots on, and finally found a pair.

Ken dandled them in his hands. "I think I wore those when I was about six. Carey, how are you going to wake up? You can't have an alarm clock."

"Grandma has a nightclock with a luminous dial. If I happen to be awake I can see the time."

"But if you don't?"

Carey was sure she would. She was so excited she thought she would not go to sleep at all.

"What side of the bed do you sleep on?" asked Ken.

She looked up at him. In the dim light his face looked gentle and beautiful.

"The side nearest the window."

"Leave the screen up a little. I can put in my hand and reach your shoulder."

Her head sank. It was a gesture of assent, but that was not all. There was somthing tremulous that moved between them. For a few moments they sat so, in silence. Then they got to their feet and returned to the living-room where the men were pulling on their coats and making ready to leave.

Carey's uncle said to her, as he put her into her seat in the pick-up, "You'll want to see all you can," and hung his binoculars on their leather strap over her shoulder. And as she was thanking him, he leaned closer and whispered that the only reason he wasn't going along himself as far as the Monument was to leave her free to have her little spree without supervision. Carey suspected that the stiffness which he was feeling as a result of his ride yesterday had something to do with it, too.

Excitement Features Carey's Truck Ride

At the same moment Rob was telling Gus, "Watch out for the little girl, Gus." And Gus said, "Ya, Boss," and their eyes met on the promise.

And then, just as Ken was letting in the clutch of the pick-up to follow the station wagon, Rob jumped on the running board and Ken pulled the car to a stop.

"Yes, sir?"

"Keep the same order you are in. Don't pass Howard."

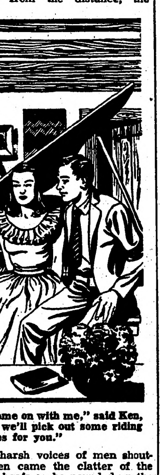
"Yes, sir."

Rob dropped off the running board and Ken let in the clutch.

The lights in front of them curved off. She felt the rough-going of a country road; then other curves, awkward and tilted; then some terrible chuckholes through which Ken eased the truck expertly, then suddenly they were in a wide yard before the black shape of a house; parts of it picking up outline from the lights of the truck. A window sprang into light as a blind flew up, and there was the silhouette of a very fat woman clutching a gown around her. There were little sharp knobs all over her head.

There was a chorus of yapping dogs.

The air was torn by the sound of a horse neighing and several answering from the distance, the rough, harsh voices of men shouting, then came the clatter of the horse's hoofs as he pounded up the ramp into the truck. There were more shouts, and then the slamming of wood and iron as the back of the truck was closed. Howard's car was already moving, backing to get out of the way of the truck. A man appeared at the side of the pick-up. He was a grotesque shape, loaded with saddle and an armful of equipment.



"Come on with me," said Ken, "and we'll pick out some riding clothes for you."

"Hello, Ken."

"Hello, Hal."

The saddle and equipment were dumped into the pick-up and the man vanished.

And now they were on the highway. Smooth going. And Gus increased his pace.

When he spoke again it was very impersonally. "Looks more like last October than early September."

"What does?"

"The grass." He motioned toward the sere and yellow plains. There was not a particle of color in the landscape. "Winter's coming early this year and it's going to be a tough one."

"How do you know?" Carey never failed to come through with a question, but Ken was coming to feel that there was really something to be said for it, because it gave a fellow a chance.

Storm Threatens Break Before Search Ended

His voice was deep and firm—quite like his father's—when he answered. "Haven't you noticed the animals? The cows and horses have got fur two inches long all over them! They've been getting ready for it. They know!"

"Two inches!.. marveled Carey.

The cars ahead swung off the highway, crossed the railway tracks and took a dirt road that went southwest. It was not a very good road, and Gus slackened speed a little. Carey could see that the country was changing. They were getting near to the Buttes.

The chuckwagon, in charge of one of Bill Beasley's cooks, was at the rendezvous before them. Carey did not know exactly what she had expected the Monument to be, but certainly not just a great rock sticking up out of the plains, roughly shaped like a small pyramid, with one face smoothed off and inscribed with the brief tale of the massacre of a troop of American cavalry by Shoshone Indians in the year of 1873.

Gus, leaving the horses still in the truck, walked slowly to the chuckwagon for coffee. Some of the men did likewise, others were following the example of Ken and Howard, studying and discussing the hoofprints that were plainly seen pressed upon or cut into the ochre-colored, dried up grass.

Howard suddenly gave a yell that brought the men crowding around him. "See here? That's Pete's hoofprint! As big as a bucket! He's still with them!"

Buck thought hard riding might catch up with the horses before the day was over. No tellin'—they might be tucked away in some depression of the ground or some little draw within five or ten miles of the Monument. It was worth a try anyhow.

Thinking about this—that Jewel might be somewhere quite near, Carey squeezed her hands together in excitement.

Gus brought her a cup of coffee. "Awful black, but give you strent, Carey." Carey went to Cookie for sugar who, with a beaming smile which showed absolutely toothless gums under his drooping brown moustache, poured sugar into the thick black fluid.

Gus and Moody were talking about the weather. A storm was sure coming. It was getting cold fast. But they might catch up with the horses before it broke. This sky—it was getting lower—looked like it was going to be fog pretty soon. If they didn't get the horses now, before this storm came, they wouldn't get them until spring. This wasn't just a storm coming. It was winter. Look at the thick fur on the horses. Been getting ready. A hard winter and an early winter. Thunderhead was taking his mares to the foothills of the Snowy Range, and when they once got there, goodby.

Spring, thought Carey, her heart sinking. Into her coffeecup fell a big feathery flake of snow. For a split second she saw the star shape of it, then it was gone. She raised her face and looked for more, and saw them here and there, drifting softly. And the wind was more than a drift now, and it was from the east.

"Here it comes, boys!" yelled Georgie Dale. "We better get moving!"

They bolted the last of their coffee and doughnuts, picked up their bridles and crowded around the truck. The back was lowered, the horses clattered down and each man took his own.

Carey wondered if Ken had forgotten that he had said he would let her have a ride before they got off. No, there he was coming toward her leading a big sorrel. "Here's Redwing, Carey. You're going to have a ride before we leave."

Gus raised his voice. "Looks to me like you're licked. Dis is an easterner an' it's comin' fast. You can try, but you may be wantin' me before noon, so I won't go back to de ranch right away. If you don't stay away too long, I'll be here to take you home."

But Carey shook her head. "I don't believe there's time, Ken," she said. "Look at them. They're all mounting."

Leonard Moody swung into his saddle and turning his head said, "Come on, fellers."

"Go on, Ken," said Carey. "I'll be seein' you."

"Come on!" It was an impatient yell from Howard, who was already mounted.

"Goodby," said Ken. He put out a hand and they shook hands gravely. Their eyes met.

Then Ken mounted Redwing and joined the others.

Carey Sets Out For Ride in Hills

Carey felt very deserted and her face quivered. The wind was terribly cold and it cut through the cotton of her trousers to the skin.

"Don't the little gal have a horse to ride?" asked Cookie sympathetically. "See that roan pony over there a-grazin'? Ye can take a ride on her, as good a pony as there is in Wyoming. I've had her eight year."

"But," said Carey quaveringly, "she's yours, and you'll be taking her along with you. I've got to go back with Gus."

"Gus ain't goin' till noon or so. An' I'm not startin' after the boys just yet. Ain't had my breakfast."

"You mean your second breakfast!" yelled Tim.

"Or your third!" contributed Wink.

Cookie ignored them. "When everybody else is fed, then I get mine. I won't be leavin' for a while yet. I'll saddle the pony for ye and ye can get a look around anyways."

Carey pointed to a group of cone-shaped hills to the northwest, one quite high. "Think there's time for me to ride up that hill? I could see from there, I could see the men riding." She lifted her binoculars. "With these," she added.

"Sure, sure, plenty of time," said Cookie amiably and went to saddle the roan for her.

Gus sang out, "What you saddling up for, Cookie?"

"The little gal wants to try my pony," shouted back Cookie. "She kin be ridin' around while I eats my breakfast."

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES
As we get older, stress and strain, over-exertion, excessive smoking or exposure to cold sometimes slows down kidney function. This may lead many folks to complain of nagging backache, loss of pep and energy, headaches and dizziness. Getting up nights or frequent passages may result from minor bladder irritations due to cold, dampness or dietary indiscretions.
If your discomforts are due to these causes, don't wait, try Doan's Pills, a mild diuretic. Used successfully by millions for over 50 years. While these symptoms may often otherwise occur, it's amazing how many times Doan's give happy relief—help the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters flush out waste. Get Doan's Pills today!

Warren, Minn.

Dear Editor:

At the request of friends and organizations, I have filed and become a candidate for Congress from the Ninth Congressional District of Minnesoa, on the Democratic-Farmer-Labor ticket. I am now, and have always been pretty much of an Independent in politics, and I place platforms and principles above any slavish adherence to party. I am endorsed by the Independent Farmer-Labor Federation and have filed on the Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party ticket, as I feel that this party most nearly represents my ideas and principles.

In a few days, I shall present to the people of my district my platform and principles, so that the people may know where I stand on what I consider the important issues of the day. I shall endeavor to swing around the district and meet as many of the voters personally as it is possible for me.

If elected, I shall endeavor to represent all of the people of my district and particularly the farmers, the working people and the small business men. I believe it is not enough that a man stands for the right principles during the campaign . . . He must remain true to his principles after the election. Promises are easily made and sometimes are easily forgotten after election. If I am elected I shall endeavor to remain true to the people, and to the principles and platform on which I am elected. I shall endeavor to carry on the fight for people after election as well as before. On that basis I shall submit my platform, and solicit your vote and support.

Respectfully.

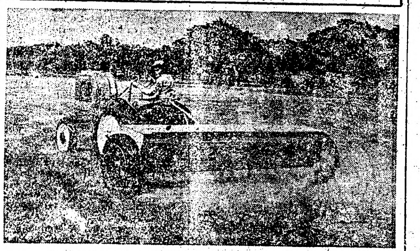
HUSBAND AND WIFE STATE FAIR RIVALS

It will be nip and tuck, as usual, when Kenneth Zeller and wife, Edna, Zumbrota, Minn., compete for top cheese honors at the Minnesota State Fair, Aug. 26 thru Sept. 4. Kenneth was last year's state fair cheddar cheese champion; while Edna copped the blue ribbon in 1948. The two are shown, above, with cheeses entered in this year's show. Biggest exhibition of dairy and beef cattle, swine, sheep, horses and poultry in Northwest history is predicted by those in charge. New records also seem certain for the farm machinery, agriculture, woman's activities, horticulture, 4-H club, fine arts, and bee and honey shows, say fair officials. This year's entertainment program will present Two big Thrill Days, Aug. 29 and 31, and spectacular auto races the other eight days. A sensational Thrill Night program, featuring Joie Chitwood's Auto Dare Devils, will be given opening night; and the mammoth State Fair Revue of 1950 will hold center stage last nine nights.

Fall Pasture Fertilization Adds Grazing Days, Cuts Feed Costs and Boosts Profits



Top-dressing pastures with a complete fertilizer this fall means extra grazing days next spring.

TOP-DRESSING your pastures this fall with a complete fertilizer containing nitrogen, phosphate and potash will give your beef and dairy cattle extra grazing days next spring, cut down your feed bill, boost meat and milk output and reduce production costs, reports the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee.

The fertilizer can be added any time this fall before freezing.

The committee cites these advantages of using a complete fertilizer:

1—The nitrogen in the fertilizer gives the legume-grass crop needed nourishment for fast early growth in spring before soil nitrogen itself is available and before the legume nodule bacteria begin to fix nitrogen in the soil.

2—A firm foundation of phosphate and potash is essential for higher crop yields. Nitrogen needs the support of these nutrients to do its best work; phosphate and potash cannot function without nitrogen.

When the legume-grass crop provides earlier spring grazing, you need fewer days of barn feeding. This means a saving in the feed bill.

Spreading fertilizer in the fall spreads the work too. Farmers have more time for such work in fall than in spring, and the turf is more solid.

Plant food added in fall has a chance to get down where the roots are, through freezing and thawing periods during winter. Nutrients are then available for the legume roots when spring growth starts.

You don't have to work the fertilizer into the soil. Grass roots close to the surface take up the soluble plant food.

Farmers planning fall pasture improvement work can get advice from their county agents or state agronomists on the kind and amount of fertilizer to use. Tests show that applications of 300 to 600 pounds per acre produce profitable results.

Can Minnesota do a better job than Nature herself?

DISCUSSING THE UNCERTAIN FUTURE of Minnesota's iron ore industry, Doug Madsen of the Brainerd Journal Press writes: "The obvious thing to do to benefit Minnesota is to build every prospective taconite plant as fast as possible . . . The supply of taconite (iron-bearing rock) is almost without limit, and from it a more usable ore can be manufactured than nature has made by its methods. Minnesota could, if it wished to help, hold and encourage a big manufacturing industry and eventually profit more from the big payrolls than it has in the past."

Madsen

IT'S GOOD TO KNOW that human ingenuity now has an answer to the question of Minnesota's iron ore future. Out of taconite can come not only fine iron ore, but new jobs, new business and continuing tax revenue for the state.

And as Mr. Madsen suggests, Minnesota people can help bring about this big taconite production program. They can help if they understand just what the iron ore industry is up against . . .

- It's up against the problem of investing hundreds of millions of dollars in gigantic new taconite manufacturing plants. Unlike our diminishing high-grade ores, taconite and low-grade ores must be elaborately processed before they're any good to anybody.
- It's up against far higher production costs. Example: it takes twice the manpower to turn out a ton of taconite concentrate, versus a ton of high-grade ore from an open-pit mine.
- It's up against taxes far stiffer than you might imagine. The iron ore industry now pays occupation and royalty taxes at a 12% rate. While this would appear to be only twice the rate of the corporate income tax paid by other industries of Minnesota, the occupation tax law does not permit the deductions allowed under the income tax law. Hence the actual comparative burden is much greater. And iron ore property taxes are assessed at a rate much steeper than other Minnesota property owners pay.

Knowing this, you can understand why the present producers of iron ore in this state are concerned about whether they'll be able to produce taconite ore cheaply enough to compete with foreign iron ore.

You can also understand why Mr. Madsen indicates that the attitude of Minnesota will affect the future of the iron ore industry. By giving this industry the same kind of treatment other Minnesota industries get — by setting up a stable, reasonable ore tax policy—the people of this state can actually do themselves a real favor!

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Reds Make New Advance in Korea; Living Costs Continue to Climb Truman Asks Mobilization Steps;

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

KOREA:

Reds Advance

For four weeks Americans had picked up their morning newspapers and read about the Communist advances in Korea. Now, as the fifth week of the conflict began, the Reds continued to make advances, but not with the ease of the early weeks of the invasion.

The military picture in Korea was not bright by any means, but at the same time, it was not so hopeless as it seemed a few days ago.

The Communists had advanced into Yongdong, about 20 miles south of fallen Taejon, on the central front. Along the western coast, the Commies advanced south to Mokpo on the southern tip of Korea. On the northern front that touches the east coast, Yongdok, captured by American forces, was retaken by Red troops.

North Korean troops had captured two-thirds of South Korea and were continuing steady pressure upon American and South Korean troops. The line was slowly being pushed back toward the main American supply port of Pusan.

According to U. S. military experts, however, the picture had its brighter side. They pointed to the number of reinforcements that have reached Korea, the telling blows of the U.S. air force on supply lines and tanks, and the success of the new 3½-inch bazooka against Red tanks.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur, commander of United Nations forces in Korea, made the statement that the Communists have lost their chance for victory.

A new view of the conflict has been taken by the Pentagon. At first the Korean affair was looked upon as a minor fight which this country could take care of in six months. This estimate has been revised sharply upward.

There is no lack of optimism over the eventual result, but there is a clearly defined desire to discourage any thought of a swift victory. In fact, some military authorities report it may be next spring before an offensive can be launched and as many as 200,000 men may be used in it.

A general summary of the situation would seem to indicate the picture has many unpleasant features, but is not entirely hopeless.

LIVING COSTS:

Continue to Climb

To the average American, the man who has a definite income within which he must live, a new and serious worry has appeared. Prices have continued to climb since the beginning of the Korean war, not as fast as the first days after the opening of the conflict, but a steady upward spiral that is beginning to cause hardship for those with low incomes.

The creeping advance widened out through the list of goods, clothing and food. Only a few items essential to America's standard of living remained at the level of the first frightening days of the Korean conflict.

The experts believe the American people are bringing the increases upon themselves. Consumers still crowded into stores to stock up on goods they remembered as scarce in the last war. Department store sales soared 24 percent above the same period of last year. The greatest gain was 39 percent in Dallas, Texas.

Sugar, coffee, cocoa, flour, lard and eggs were reported higher throughout the country. The price of meat climbed rapidly in some localities, although wholesale prices were reported to have fallen since the opening of the Korean conflict.

Observers pointed out that by hoarding, Americans are creating a demand. In turn retailers are taking advantage of the demand and increasing prices for quick profit.

It was the old story of quick profit and greed and the selfishness of a minor group of individuals causing hardship on the public generally.

As compared to prices a week before the conflict began, tin was up 15 cents a pound, wheat up 18½ cents a bushel, rubber up 11½ cents a pound, eggs up 8 cents a dozen, lard up 4½ cents a pound, and hogs up $4 a hundredweight.

This trend, if continued, can mean price controls will become necessary. It may mean, also, rationing of food, clothing and vital industrial materials.

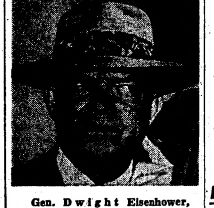
POPULATION:

Up 19 Million

The 1950 population of the United States has been estimated at 150,520,000, almost 19 million higher than the 1940 total, the Census bureau reports.

The nation's population has just about doubled in 50 years and the 1940 to 1950 jump was the greatest for any 10-year period in history. The figures will not be official until checked and revised where necessary.

Eisenhower



Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, president of Columbia university and a national defense consultant of President Truman, wears a quizzical expression as he is interviewed by newsmen. He does not see today's Korean fighting as necessarily the start of World War III, but insisted "we've got to win." He added, "If our forces in Korea are defeated the entire world will be thrown into another great war."

TRUMAN:

Report to Congress

President Truman in his message to congress on the Korean situation called for $10,000,000,000 down payment on a vast mobilization drive to win the war and combat any Red aggression elsewhere in the world.

He left no doubt in the minds of Americans, and the world in general, about the situation when he said:

"The free world has made it clear, through the United Nations, that lawless aggression will be met with force. This is the significance whose importance cannot be overlooked.

"I shall not attempt to predict the course of events. But I am sure that those who have it in their power to unleash or withhold acts of armed aggression must realize that new recourse to aggression in the world today might well strain to the breaking point the fabric of world peace.

"We will not flinch in the face of danger or difficulty."

He recommended anti-inflation controls, a swift stepping up of war production, additional huge sums to arm non-Communist nations and a sharp boost in taxes.

He authorized the calling of reservists and guardsmen, along with free use of the draft law to build up fighting units. Secretary of Defense Johnson was authorized to call units as needed.

A summary of the steps asked of congress:

Remove all statutory limits on size of the armed forces.

Provide $10,000,000,000 additional military funds; details to be supplied later.

Authorize a priorities-and-allocation system for materials for non-essential purposes; prevent inventory hoarding; authorize seizure of materials needed for the fighting effort.

Authorize government loans and loan guaranties to spur defense productions.

SECURITY:

Call F. B. I.

President Truman's statement asking all law-enforcement officers and amateur detectives to channel suspicious information regarding espionage, sabotage, and subversive activities to the F.B.I. had caused many Americans to wonder what is in store for the U.S.

The statement presumably was prompted by the Korean war. Truman stressed that all such inquiries "must be conducted in a comprehensive manner on a national basis, and all information carefully sifted out and correlated in order to avoid confusion."

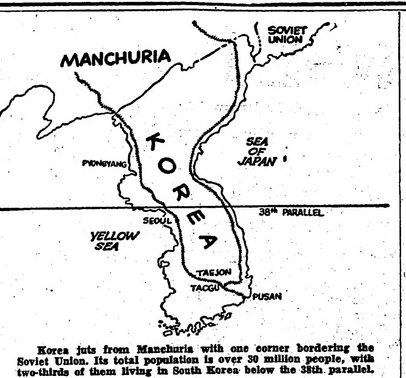
Truman made no mention of Communists in his statement. Anyone with information should report in person to the nearest F.B.I. office, located in each of the nation's 51 major cities, or ask the telephone operator to connect them to the nearest office, an F.B.I. spokesman reported.

The spokesman emphasized the informant's identity would be kept confidential and he would not normally be brought face to face with the accused. He said anonymous letters are not welcome.

Unemployment

With nearly everything going up these days, it is astonishing to find anything going down very fast. There is one thing, however: the number of payments to the unemployed.

According to the labor department, between January and June there was a 30 per cent drop in the number of people drawing unemployment insurance benefits under state laws.



Korea juts from Manchuria with one corner bordering the Soviet Union. Its total population is over 30 million people, with two-thirds of them living in South Korea below the 38th parallel.

LAND OF THE MORNING CALM

Korea Has Struggled for Unity And Independence for 50 Years

A great many people in the United States were very vague about the location of Korea until the recent outbreak of fighting in that little country that juts from Manchuria and the Soviet Union, not unlike Florida from the southern part of this country.

It is a rugged land of 30,000,000 people with mountain ranges comparable in height to the Appalachians covering virtually all the country. Granite hills up to 6,300 feet fold the terrains of the United States sponsored Republic of Korea—the Indiana-sized southern three-seventh of the peninsular land. They form a twisting network of valleys which invaders have always followed.

So completely do the rugged hills crease the country that rail and highway routes twist fantastically in connecting cities and towns.

Chief transportation artery of South Korea, for instance, is the double-tracked, standard-gauge railroad running diagonally from Haeju in the northwest on the violated 38th-parallel boundary through Seoul, Taejon, and Taegu to the southeastern port of Pusan. From Haeju to Pusan by way of the cities named is just about 290 air miles and 400 miles by rail.

Rice Main Crop

At some time in the past, nature's forces tilted the southward-pointing peninsula down on the west, or Yellow sea side, and up on the east, the coast of the Sea of Japan. As a result of this tilt, Korea, although it averages 150 miles in width, has its drainage divide only about 15 miles inland from the east coast.

The west coast has a partly submerged short line marked by countless fjordlike bays and islands. Yellow Sea tides, fluctuating 25 feet and more, have created broad tidal mud flats.

The east coast on the other hand, has almost no islands and a straight, steep shore line. Mountains slope into the sea or from narrow sand beaches washed by clear water.

South Korea is the agricultural part of the peninsula as divided arbitrarily at the 38th parallel in 1945 as a Russo-American military expedient for the disarming of Japanese troops. Rice is grown on every flat space where irrigation is possible. Thatched farm houses and green terraces snuggle in every narrow valley between the endless lines of folded hills. Soybeans, hemp, wheat, barley, and vegetables are cultivated in dry fields.

Throughout its modern history the ancient nation of Korea has been engaged in a tragic struggle for freedom, unity, and independence.

Japan annexed the country in 1910 and proceeded to exploit its resources thoroughly until the end of World War II. But for years prior to the annexation, Korea had been a pawn in the big power politics of Japan, China, and Russia.

Peace-seeking Korea ushered in its modern era by concluding an "open door" treaty with Japan in 1876. But Nipponese promises of independence were soon forgotten. The Sino-Japanese war of 1894-95 left Japan the dominant foreign power in Korea. This hold was consolidated by victory in the Russo-Japanese war a decade later, and the Koreans had no free government of their own until the elections held in 1948 under United Nations auspices.

Founded in 1122 B. C.

Old Korea's origins are obscured by time, but her people claim a history of more than 42 centuries. Korean legend celebrates a founder named Tan Gun, of superhuman origin, whose alleged tomb is still venerated. More credible are the historic references to a Chinese noble who emigrated to Korea in 1122 B. C., and founded a dynasty there that ruled the country for many centuries.

South Korea is the agricultural section of the country and many farmers still use the ancient means of transportation of their forefathers. A wagon and water buffalo haul the family's possessions.

Much of what we now know as Korea had attained a degree of unity and enjoyed an old culture at the time the Roman Empire flourished. In the 14th century the relatively small peninsular country became known as the kingdom of "Chosen", a name often given Korea to this day.

Korea, after completing its treaty of 1876 with the Japanese, made similar "open door" agreements with a number of other powers, including the United States. But none served to protect Korea from aggression and exploitation.

Japan, after winning its war with Russia, made Korea a protectorate for a time until the annexation, when Korean properties were seized or expropriated.

Korean patriots penned their own declaration of independence in 1919. This touching and beautifully written document was presented to the Japanese with peaceful intent, but the signers were executed.

A provisional government in exile was formed. For many years this powerless government, under Dr. Syngman Rhee, campaigned for independence. In 1948 the Rhee government at Seoul was recognized by the United Nations, though the northern half of the country was under Russian domination.

Strange Customs

The Koreans have a number of customs which people of this country find amusing.

For instance, by long established custom, the Korean bridegroom stays with his bride three days in his father-in-law's house before returning with her to his own parents' house. Official manhood begins for the Korean only after marriage. Even if he is 70, a bachelor's opinion has little influence.

White is the traditional color of mourning in Korea. Since it is worn for three years for close relatives, Korean families are in mourning white much of the time.

Potential barrier to an invader's progress is the population of South Korea. It is now 20 million, three-fourths of them on farms. Despite the mountains that rule out cultivation of most of the area, that is more than twice the population of North Korea, and five times that of Indiana, comparatively a farming paradise.

Huge Hats Safeguard Against Plotting

The Koreans' traditional habit of wearing many and varied hats is said to have had its origin as a measure against plotting, according to the National Geographic Society. An ancient ruler, the legend goes, once concluded that men could not conspire if they could not put their heads together. Hence he required his subjects to wear such huge hats that whispered conversations could not be carried on.

Household Hints

The best way to combat pests that attack the family garden is to direct a strong, vigorous attack against them before they get a foothold.

Vegetables which have been peeled lose more minerals and vitamins in cooking than those left whole; large losses occur when vegetables are cut in small pieces. Vegetables should be cut just before being used.

Store your winter knick-knacks away to make your summer cleaning job easier. And for less washing and ironing, use place mats of cork, plastic, or straw instead of tablecloths.

When you fit a hook and eye on a screen door, do you put the eye in the frame and the hook on the door?

That's not the best way. The hook rattles every time the door is closed. It wears a half-moon mark on the door. When the door is slammed, it may flip over and lock you out.

The solution: simply reverse hook and eye.

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

Seeking Crown Jewel, a valuable filly which has been freed from her crate by Thunderhead, a white stallion owned by Ken McLaughlin and banished to the Wyoming hills, a search party headed by Ken's dad, Rob, gets underway. The filly is owned by Beaver Greenway, an Idaho rancher, and he and his niece, Carey Marsh are along on the hunt. Ken, who is smitten with Carey, is riding in the pickup truck with her. Howard Ken's brother, finds a footprint of Old Pete, a range bum, who is known to be hanging around Thunderhead and Jewel. As the men leave the cook wagon to begin the search, Carey goes for a ride in the hills.

CHAPTER VIII

Carey mounted the roan. It pranced a little, feeling the strange hands and the unaccustomed lightness of the rider. Carey slid around in the far too large saddle.

"The stirrups are too long," she said and held the mare while Cookie shortened the stirrup leathers. Then she took command of the pony, got a firm hold with her knees, touched her heels into her side and swung it in a small circle.

"Say! You're right handy with a horse!" exclaimed Cookie admiringly. He stood watching, his arms folded over his stomach underneath an unbelievably dirty, white apron.

"What's her name?" asked Carey.

"Name's Mamie."

"Well, come on, Mamie. We're off." They cantered away.

Cookie watched them a moment, then turned to his wagon and busied himself at the table. He mixed a quantity of honey and butter together on a large tin plate, stirring it with the flat of his knife as a painter mixes paints on a palette, then cuts himself a thick slice of the white bread which he made himself once a week, and placed this on top of the mixture, pressing it down, lifting it with a fork and soaking the other side.

"Better keep away!" warned Cookie jovially. "When I get started everybody better have a bathin' suit on!"

But Gus had something else on his mind. "Dot pony she's ridin'—is it a mare or a geldin'?"

Cookie hastily swallowed his mouthful of bread and honey and wiped his mouth, looking at Gus.

"It's a mare, Gus. I never give it a thought."

"Well, that ain't so gude with this stud around." The two men turned and watched Carey cantering toward the group of hills. Gus spoke in a worried way, "Dot white stallion of Ken's is nuthin' to fool with."

"Sure, I know all about it," said Cookie, "but say, she ain't goin' in that direction." He pointed at the troop of men riding southwest, still clearly to be seen.

Gus took off his hat and scratched his head. He looked first at the riders, then at Carey who, even as he watched, disappeared behind the nearest of the cone-shaped hills. He looked back at the riders and spoke his thought. "When horses is out free dey don't go in a straight line, unless dey be headin' fur some place. Thunderhead an' dose mares cud have circled around and be watchin' us from behind our backs, right now."

"Say!" said Cookie. "I jes remembered. The mare's with foal, anyway."

As Carey climbed the little peak she realized that no more feathery little stars or gauntlets were falling on her sleeves or face. She kept turning to watch the riders. They progressed in a close pack and a cloud of dust followed them.

When she reached the summit she halted her mare, put the binoculars to her eyes and tried to see if she could pick Ken and Howard out of the group. Then she swung the glasses to right and left, studying every detail of the plains which, because seen through the round circle, took on startling significance. They seemed not real at all, but something created and planned especially for her.

There slid into view a beautiful picture, framed in the narrow circle: the statue of a horse, pure white, standing on a sharp crest. He was motionless, slightly turned, his head twisted up, every muscle taut and ready.

Carey lowered the binoculars. Her heart was thumping. Was it Thunderhead? No—it wasn't real at all; it was just something in the binoculars—

She sat a moment trying to gather her wits. She looked, without the glasses, at the hill where she had seen the horse but could see nothing new except the barren-looking plains, the ridges and rocks, the Snowy Range far away. No, there it was! A speck of white on a hilltop!

Similarity of Cones Baffling to Carey

She put the binoculars to her eyes again, seeking him, swinging the glasses in small circles until she captured him. She adjusted the focus with painstaking care until every detail of the stallion was revealed as if an etching— the intent, white-ringed eyes, the sharply cocked ears, the widely flaring nostrils with a hint of scarlet inside. They palpitated. Was he actually smelling her? Certainly he was watching her—examining her and the mare inch by inch just as she was examining him.

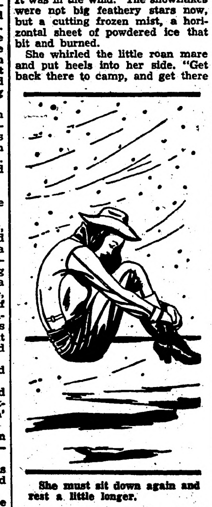
It seemed to Carey that she had never seen anything so beautiful, so wild and so pure.

Then, as she watched, the low sky sank lower. A mist dimmed his shape—he was completely blotted out.

Astonished, she let the glasses fall on their strap and looked around her. Everywhere the sky was sinking. Mist, clouds, fog, snow enveloped her.

She heard a whinning in the air. It was in the wind. The snowflakes were not big feathery stars now, but a cutting frozen mist, a horizontal sheet of powdered ice that bit and burned.

She whirled the little roan mare and put heels into her side. "Get back there to camp, and get there in a hurry!" Mamie plunged willingly down the slope.



She must sit down again and rest a little longer.

At the bottom, Carey found she had forgotten just how she had reached that central highest peak. On every side there were these steep cones going up. The snow was thicker. She could not hold her eyes open against it. Mamie plodded forward. She seemed to be going up another peak. Carey stopped her and tried to remember. Sitting still on her horse for that moment, she chilled through. Where the wind drove the snow against her leg it melted and instantly froze so that as she tried to brush it off, it was a thin sheet of ice that shattered beneath her hand. And immediately there was another sheet of ice forming on her thigh. Then on her cheek. She kept brushing the ice off. Mamie started forward of her own accord. Carey remembered now that she had gone up and down one small hill before she had reached the central peak. It was this small hill that lay between her and the camp. Mamie was right. They must go up this hill. She urged the little mare forward, bending low, shielding her face and eyes with one arm. She tried to see where she was going but there was only the thick white smother. She thought wonderingly. Why, it's like a sheet wound around me!

They went up the hill and down. Presently Mamie started up another hill. Carey halted her. That's wrong, she thought, there weren't two hills to go up and down. Mamie pulled restessly at the bit. Carey thought of the wind. It was an easterner, she remembered. The wind was driving from the east. That should direct her to the camp. But here amongst the peaks, the wind was swirling from every direction. You couldn't tell a thing from the wind.

Carey Realizes Way Back to Camp Lost

Everyone knows that horses will find their way home if given their head, thought Carey. But I want to go to the camp. Will she feel that is home because the team and the chuckwagon and the other horse and her master are there? Or will she head for her real home, the Beasley ranch—and how far away is that? She did not remember, but thought it was seven or eight miles. If Mamie had real sense, real horse sense, she would go to the nearest place; she would go to the Monument. . . . She gave her her head again, and said, "It's up to you now Mamie, you find the way."

If she weren't so cold.

She had no idea how far they had gone or how much time had passed. There was nothing to measure by. No change of light. No landmarks to be seen. Just the utter sameness of white driving snow and wind, and the cold getting deeper into her.

Carey decided they must go back and tried to stop the mare. But Mamie fought for her head. When Carey pulled her more determinely she reared, then plunged. Her foot slipped and she crashed to the earth. Carey rolled free, still holding the reins. But her fingers were stiff and when Mamie scrambled to her feet, one jerk of her head pulled the reins from Carey's hand. In a second, the mare had vanished, and there was no further sight nor sound of her.

Carey sat on the ground a moment, turning her back to the wind, shielding her face, then got to her feet and started forward. It was, she realized, just an aimless wandering. She had not the faintest idea where she was going. But you can't keep still in a storm like that. You'd freeze. Really freeze to death. People did. It was on the front pages of newspapers. Farmers froze to death trying to get from their own barns to their houses. Or people caught in automobiles on the highways. You've got to keep your blood circulating. You've got to keep moving. . . .

She kept at it a long time, then, worn out, flopped in the lee of a rock on a hillside and told herself she would just rest a minute or two, get a little strength back, and get going again. If only someone would find her now, before she had to move.

It seemed impossible to get going. She tried once, but decided to rest a little longer. Then she did get up. She was shaking all over. She weaved as she walked. She was stiff with the cold. She must sit down again and rest a little longer.

She whipped herself back to reality. A fine thing to do! Just to sit there with her head hanging on her chest, letting herself be frozen to death!

But she could not take another step.

It was Gus who found her an hour later.

Other men joined them before they reached the camp and she was aware of the riders coming galloping in, horses and men so coated in snow that they were unrecognizable. There was much shouting. Gus lifted her and put her into the cab of the truck which was warm because the engine was going and the heater was on. Gus left the door open and stood outside, talking to the men. Cookie had harnessed the chuckwagon.

She could hear what they were shouting—to make for Beasley's ranch. Cookie knew every turn of the country and could lead the way—a safe way for the truck to follow, and the station wagon and pick-up, and the men on their horses since it was impossible to load them into the truck. Some of the men shouted that they would make for home.

Suddenly Gus slammed the door shut and she was alone in the cab. The feeling of comfort and security was almost too much for her, and again her eyes were hot with tears. She stuck her fists into them. Her body still felt queer.

The door opened and Gus put Ken into the cab beside her. "Keep her movin' and talkin', Ken, shake her if you have to, I'll be back."

Ken's face was both awed and frightened. He took her hands and rubbed them as if he feared they would break. She tried to smile at him.

Carey Sheds Tears While Held by Ken

For a long momont their eyes met, sharing all that happened, for Carey's mind had gone all of the way toward death—the rest would have been easy—and her eyes clung to Ken's and she leaned toward him, putting the burden of this on him too, to help her carry it, and suddenly the long-held tears and sobs burst through and she cried, "Oh, Ken!" and flung herself on his breast. He put his arms around her and held her tight.

Fifteen minutes before the little calvacade turned into the Beasley ranch, Mamie trotted up to the bunkhouse, her reins dragging. She stopped before the lighted windows and gave a beseeching whinny.

Thunderhead's band now numbered fourteen. There were ten mares and three colts aged two or three months. The colts belonged to three of the mares he had brought from the valley with him, a bay and a sorrel and the large black mare Ken had named Hagar.

These mares had also had yearlings, but when the new foals came Thunderhead had driven the yearlings out of the band.

It is the common law of horsedom that when a mare drops a foal the yearling running at her side must be banished. One is enough for her to nurse and care for. The stallion sees to it and drives them away. At first they try desparately to get back and the struggle continues for days. They cannot conceive of life, separated from their dams. Eventually, bitten and bleeding and scarred, they accept their first serious defeat.

Princess' Husband Climbing Ladder

Princess Elizabeth's husband has started out to work himself to the top of the ladder. Prince Philip won his first command in the British navy recently.

The admiralty announced the tall, handsome Philip would take charge of the anti-aircraft frigate Magpie in August.

Court circles predicted also that at about the same time he would be upped from lieutenant to lieutenant commander.

Philip, 29 next month, now is first lieutenant of the destroyer Chequers, based at Malta. He returned to active Naval duty last fall.

The 1,430-ton Magpie is manned by six officers and 186 men. She mounts four six-inch guns, eight two-pounders and several pompon anti-aircraft pieces.

Fertilizing Pasture Boosts Beef Output, Cuts Costs, Speeds Steers' Weight Gains

More beef per acre at lower cost results from heavy pasture fertilization.

FERTILIZING pastures works in four ways to help farmers produce more beef per acre at lower cost, reports the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee, in citing a recent statement by W. M. Beeson, Purdue University animal husbandman.

Beeson listed these advantages of pasture fertilization:

1—Steers on high producing pastures get more nutrients per mouthful of feed, because fertilization increases the quality as well as the quantity of the forage. Fertilization decreases the grass's fiber content, thus giving more total digestible units per a given amount of pasture.

2—A pasture's protein content can be increased from 50 to 100 per cent by the use of plenty of plant food.

3—Heavy fertilization helps increase the pasture's livestock carrying capacity. Good pastures will maintain one steer per acre, whereas it takes from two to four acres of poor pasture to support a steer.

4—Steers that are confined to lush grazing areas need less exercise to find the required nutrients. Thus they gain weight faster. Cattle on poor pasture spend more energy searching for nutrients so have less left for possible weight gains. Poor pastures are simply gymnasiums or exercise lots.

"If you don't believe this," said Beeson, "take your cattle out while they are on pasture and drive them a mile a day. Then see how fast they gain. Actually, you will drive off a lot of weight."

In stressing how fertilization helps produce more beef per acre at less cost, Beeson cited tests at the Miller-Purdue experimental farm. Fertilizing blue grass increased beef production about 200 pounds per acre, he reported, when 300 pounds of 0-20-0 and 200 pounds of ammonium nitrate were added.

Glendorado (Minn.) creameryman

"For our farmer-owners—and for me, too—LAND O'LAKES takes away the worry of trying to find a market for our dairy products," says Mr. Bornholdt, operator of the Glendorado Co-op Creamery Association. "Because LAND O'LAKES takes a load off my own shoulders, I can give more time to making quality products that get premium prices ... more time to helping our owner-patrons, and making sure they get a square deal, every time." That's what operator after operator, farmer after farmer, says of LAND O'LAKES. It pays to market the LAND O'LAKES way.

Benitt-Larson Wedding

The Nazareth Lutheran church was the scene of a pretty Wednesday evening, August 9th at 8:30 o'clock when Miss JoAnn Benitt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Benitt, became the bride of Donald L. Larson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ole Larson during a candlelit ceremony. Rev. V. G. Sorenson officiated at the double ring ceremony.

Large baskets of garden flowers together with tall whith lighted candlebra and ferns furnished the setting for the ceremony.

Miss Orlette Hjelle, a friend and former classmate of the bride played a thirty minute prelude of nuptial music and the Lohengrin's Bridal Chorus darling the procession down the candle-lit aisle.

Before the ceremony Miss Arlene Tveten, friend of the bride sang "Because" and while the couple knelt at the altar "The Lord's Prayer". Miss Hjelle and Miss Tveten wore gowns of green net over taffeta and blue taffeta respectively.

The bride wore a gown of white slipper satin with fitted bodice and net yoke, buttoned down the back, long sleeves coming to a point over the hand and a full skirt extending into a long train. Her full length veil of French mesh edged with wide lace extended over her very long train and was held in place with a coronet of seed pearls. She carried a shower bouquet of white mums centered with a large orchid. Her only jewelry was a rhinestone necklace, a gift from the groom. The legendary gear something old, new, borrowed and blue was also worn

Mrs. Reuben Benitt, sister of the groom, was maid of honor, and Mrs. Clinton Knutson of Grygla was her sisters bridesmaid They wore identical gowns of green nylon marquesette and yellow taffeta and carried shower bouquets of yellow, white and lavender mums. From their matching tiarras extended short net veils. Their ensembles were complemented with rhinestone necklaces, gifts of the bride.

She wore a gown of white satin fashioned after that of the bride and carried a basket of mums from which she strewed petals in the path of the bride. Little Rodney Gene Knutson, nephew and godchild of the bride, carried the rings on a white satin pillow from which extended white satin ribbons tied with loveknots.

The groom was attended by Rueben Benitt, brother of the bride, and Loyd Larson of Riverdale, N. D., brother of the groom. Ushers were Orvis Benitt and Marlin Augustine, brother and cousin of the bride. Prior to the bridal procession the ushers lit the candles and laid the white carpet down the aisle. The groom best men, ushers and fathers all had bouteniers of white Chrysanthemums.

The bride's mother wore an aqua silk print dress with white accessories and the groom's mother wore a pink silk dress with black accessories. They wore corsages of pink roses and white mums.

Immediately following the ceremony the brides parents were hosts at a reception in the church parlors for about 125 guests. The bridal table was decorated in green, yellow and white streamers and centered with a three tiered wedding cake topped with a miniature bride and groom. Candles and bouquets of mixed flowers graced the tables. Mrs. Marlan Augustine and Mrs. Oscar Fosholm, cousins of the couple, poured. Misses Marian and Joyce Sorum, cousins of the groom were waitresses wearing gowns of lavender and green. Mrs. Bertil Ness. Mrs. Oscar Lunke and Mrs. Johnnie Nelson assisted serving. WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U. S. Forces Ordered to Stand Or Die on Korean Battle Front; Baruch Urges All-Out Controls

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

KOREA:

Stand or Die

For many Americans, who had been inclined to look upon the Korean war with indifference and an attitude of "business as usual," there came a rude awakening during the fifth week of the conflict.

Casualties began to arrive from Korea, youngsters without legs and arms, bullet-riddled young men who kept their eyes closed as they were transferred from planes to ambulances, boys who did not wish to talk or be quoted.

To the millions who had no brothers and fathers and husbands in Korea, the scenes brought back frightening pictures of World War II, memories of days filled with tears and prayers, and sometimes, utter despair.

And to the awakening American public came another shock. The commanding general in Korea, Lt. Gen. Walton H. Walker, said: "There is no point in not telling the simple truth, which is that the war has reached its critical stage."

The American army had retreated as far as it would retreat, General Walker said. He gave one order to his troops: "Stand or die."

Americans were shocked by his flat statement that his army must win or die where they stood without hope of surrender or retreat and a mass evacuation as at Dunkerque.

And in Korea the G.I. has a question for the war correspondents: "Are you telling the folks back home the truth—that it is a tough and hard fight, and we need more help at once?"

That was the situation as 120,000 Communists began a steady attack upon U. S. positions. Along the entire front, stretched in an arc from Yongdok on the north to Hadong on the south, Communist troops hammered at American lines.

Four U. S. divisions, none at full strength, with the aid of some South Korean troops, the exact number unknown, slugged it out with the invaders. American supplies and reinforcements were rushed to the battle area, but if they would be enough and in time was still the question uppermost in the minds of military leaders.

One outstanding truth stood out from all the rest: American troops were locked in the battle that would decide the Korean war and possibly the peace of the world for the next 10 to 15 years.

As Gen. Eisenhower said, "If our forces in Korea are defeated the entire world will be thrown into another great war."

It was a rude awakening for the American people, but a necessary one, most observers agreed. It was now time for the American people to get down to the bloody, unpleasant job of winning a first class war.

INFLATION:

Invitation to Defeat

Elder statesman Bernard Baruch spoke his mind (and the mind of a great segment of the public) to the senate banking committee when he urged congress to freeze all wages, prices and rents, boost taxes, and ration essential goods in a broad program to mobilize the nation's economic strength.

In his clear and determined way, Baruch asked the question that has been in the mind of the average citizen since prices began to rise after the Korean war started: "Shall we do now what we know will have to be done later, and thus hasten the victory of peace? Or shall we fumble and falter and invite defeat?"

Baruch, who played an important part in economic mobilization in two wars, urged:

Priorities and allocations as proposed by the President. Elimination of profiteering. Higher taxes. Effective price, wage and rent controls. Power to ration scarce civilian essentials where necessary. The postponement of all less essential works. A reduction of unnecessary public and private expenditures. Every effort to increase production.

Also, the development of substitutes for things in short supply. Control of all exports and imports. Conservation of whatever is scarce. And organized self-restraint among the people—"the enlightened self-discipline to accept the denials which winning the peace entails."

Congressional leaders seemed divided on Baruch's plan even if the public was not. Said Sen. Robert A. Taft, he "wholly disagrees" with the elder statesman who, he asserted is "for all-out dictatorship."

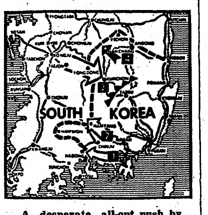
INDUSTRY:

Higher Profit Rates

The Federal Trade Commission reported that 17 of 25 major U.S. manufacturing industries had higher profit rates in 1949 than in the prewar year of 1940.

Most striking increases in the rate of return were motor vehicles from 17.3 to 29.6 per cent, biscuits and crackers from 8.7 to 16.8 per cent and bread 7.6 to 15.3 per cent. Percentage rates were based on stockholders investment after taxes.

Battle Lines



A desperate all-out push by North Korean Communists, aimed at Taegu, center of American defenses in South Korea, is underway. The Red forces hurled nine divisions against the allied line. U. S. forces gave up Hadong (1) and fell back to Chinju. Hamyang (2) was under heavy attack. In the Yondong (3) and Hamchang (4) sectors, the U. S. first cavalry and South Korean troops blunted a powerful Communist assault.

ATOMIC BOMB:

Won't Be Used

Many people have wondered in recent weeks whether or not the atomic bomb would be used in Korea. President Truman has announced it will not be used in Korea, but it was recalled that the President has asserted several times that he would not hesitate to use atomic bombs to assure the security of the United States.

As the world situation became more tense, it was obvious that officials were carefully avoiding any public discussion of the use of atomic weapons, though strategists have indicated that there are no worthwhile targets for such weapons in North Korea.

Another angle of atomic warfare was under consideration by defense officials, however. Ways and means of stopping any ship from entering American harbors that might be carrying an atomic bomb were being worked out.

Port authorities in San Francisco and New York have announced all ships from Russia or Russian satellite nations will be stopped and searched before allowed to enter into those ports.

EMPLOYMENT:

Highest in Two Years

Except for farm work, employment in the United States set a two year record during the first week of July with 52,774,000 persons employed. The previous peak was 52,452,000 in July, 1948.

The department of commerce estimated 8,440,000 farm workers were employed during the first week of July as compared with 9,647,000 in early July, 1949.

The increase in employment was attributed to a stepped up production in industries directly related to the nation's mobilization drive, most observers believed.

Secretary of Commerce Sawyer made this comment on the employment situation:

"It should be noted that, with the nation again approaching full employment, it may be necessary once more to find ways to expand our labor force to permit the increased industrial production and strengthening of the armed forces requested by the President."

He was quick to deny, however, that he had any thought of possible manpower controls in making that statement.

PLANES:

$4 Billion Order

As the Korean war developed it became obvious to all observers that the United States air force has the best planes in the world. That superiority will be increased. The air force has announced 200 manufacturers have been ordered to begin work immediately on nearly $4,400 million worth of new planes and parts.

Considerable secrecy enveloped the details of the order. Manufacturers were authorized to announce the number of additional workers they would need to fill the orders, but they were prohibited from disclosing the type of production, the number of units, the dollar value of the orders, or other information relating to the contracts.

New Economy

With an eye on the huge amounts being spent for the armed forces and defense, the house appropriations committee decided to take another look at non-military appropriations and cut them where it can. Some observers think the cuts may be drastc.

A committee spokesman said the group had no fixed goal, but was determined to "cancel all appropriations" that can be cancelled.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

To avoid having to strain cranberry sauce, run berries through a meat grinder before you cook them. In fact, you can stop right there if you want an unusual raw cranberry relish. Just run the raw berries through the meat grinder along with a couple of raw oranges, peels and all, add sugar to the resulting mixture, and let it stand a few hours before serving.

When stewed fruit begins to turn sour, reclaim it by adding a pinch of baking soda and boiling the fruit over again for a few minutes.

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

The wind turns biting cold and Carey is chilled. She sees a white speck on the horizon and, using her binoculars, makes it out as a white stallion. Looking closely, she realizes she is gazing on Thunderhead. She is thrilled with the animal's magnificent beauty, but as she watches through the glasses, he wheels and races away. It begins to turn even colder and fog, mist, clouds and snow envelop Carey. After many twistings and turnings, she suddenly discovers that she is lost. To add to her woe, the storm increases in intensity. Exhausted, Carey begins to lose consciousness when she hears voices calling in the distance.

CHAPTER IX

But Hagar's yearling, who was the Albino's only white colt, could not adjust himself to this fate. There must have been in him, together with his white coat and his magnificent conformation, the same stubborness and wilfulness that had characterized his sire. Thunderhead had driven him away with the other yearlings, but he returned and clung to the mares as close as he dared, half a mile or so away. So he truly deserved the name Ken had given him, Ishmael, driven out of his own band and yet without the companionship of any other. Now and then Thunderhead made a sortie to drive him farther off and, if he could catch up with him, punish him for his presumption. Then would Ishmael's long white slim legs—as strong as Thunderhead's own—take him floating off over the prairie to a safer distance, and Thunderhead would return to his duties.

Thunderhead's lead mare was a dry, a rangy black named Lady Godiva who had once belonged to the owner of the Steamboat Springs daily paper.

There were the two handsome brown Morgan mares which Thunderhead had stolen from Jeff Stevens. Those were also dry. There was a pair of beautiful two-year-olds, stolen from who knows where, not fully grown, one a pale honey color, one a warm russet, quite chunky. Evidently they had Palomino blood in them. These would have their first foals the following spring.

There was Jenny, Daly's mare.

And there was Jewel.

Jewel alone of all the band had no warm coat of fur. Her hair was short, close, glossy from much graining, and her hide was thin. She had never experienced snow, let alone a blizzard. All her winter nights had been spent in her comfortable box stall in the Beckwith stables. During the mild spring and summer and fall nights she had browsed and drowsed in one of the small fenced pastures. She had never had to fight against a stiff wind. Now she was beaten upon by a blinding white blizzard that bewildered her, burned her eyes, and stuck its fingers of ice into the very marrow of her bones.

Already, within her, the supernaturally intelligent mechanism of her body was hastening to repair the deficiency. The signals had been given. But it took a little time. In a week the lengthening hair would be visible. Meanwhile, she was an object of half-frozen misery if she ceased moving even for a moment.

Jenny was being hazed, too.

Horse Newcomers Always Persecuted

Newcomers in a band of horses are always persecuted exactly like the new children at school. The newcomer has to prove himself and win his way. At last he is accepted. Jewel and Jenny were "new girls."

The night wore on. Vitality died down in Jewel. Her legs did not hold her up very well but seemed to bend. Her head hung very low.

The scent came to her on one of the currents of wind that whirled around the ridge. It was a warm scent, a horse scent, and a friendly scent. Oh, better than that! It was the scent of a champion, a refuge, a god! It was the big Clyde, the gentle monster with the brown eyes and the heavy, black forelock. It was the scent of Pete!

Jewel raised her head as if she had received new life. A wild nicker of recognition burst from her. Every mare and the stallion, too, turned and looked.

Something off there in the whiteness! A huge, bulky shape standing, a little timid, a little humble in the presence of the stallion as every gelded creature must be timid and humble in the presence of the unaltered male. Jewel fled toward him and in spite of his knowledge of the danger an answering whinny rumbled up out of his deep throat.

Jewel reached him and flung herself against him. They pressed their faces together, their nostrils touched and clung. Pete's deep, tender rumbling continued.

At the moment the stallion fell upon him, reared and pawed him, bit him, and whirled to lash out with his murderous heels. But Pete was not there to receive the blow. He had faded off into the impenetrable whiteness. Not a sound—not a rumble more came from him.

Jewel felt a vicous nip on her withers and fled back to the mares. They presented their haunches and kicked her out of the herd.

Again she found her cold and lonely place on the outside and took her stand there.

A half hour passed. Then again that warm friendly smell of Pete! Again the irrepressible nicker burst from her and she dashed off to meet him. Again the stallion pursued. But this time Pete waited only for one touch of his nostrils to hers, one deep whinny—a promise not to desert her—then whirled and pounded away, his great hoofs shaking the earth.

Jewel went meekly back to her place and Thunderhead returned to his frantic chopping of the buffalo grass with his thick, white teeth, feeding voraciously, needing the nourishment and the heat that comes from it to maintain his strength and vigilance and the fire of his stallion-kingliness.

Jewel too began to paw the grass and nose underneath it for food. Her grazing brought her nearer to Pete. He stood in an unsheltered place taking the full force of the wind and snow. Step by step she approached him, at last ceased any pretense of grazing, moved close and placed herself against his towering bulk as a colt is close under its mother's side. She felt the heat of his great body and was comforted. He did not waver, but stood staunchly, the blizzard beating upon his windward side and coating it with ice.

Heal the ugly scars by planting grass seed on the ploughed fields.

The snow with which Jewel was encrusted gradually melted and dripped off. The heat from the gelding's body penetrated her own. It was delicious. She was safe. She began to drowse.

Crown Jewel might not have survived that first blizzard had it not been for Pete. In all the storms of the hard winter which she spent with Thunderhead's band on the plains between the Buttes and the Snowy Range, Pete was her protector.

As soon as the first blizzard had ended and also the terrible ground blizzard which followed it, Thunderhead led them south into the open. Here, ground would be bare of snow because of the wind which incessantly swept it. There would be grass, dry and brown but extremely nourishing. There would be shelter enough and water enough in the little draws and depression of the plains.

On winter days of true Wyoming gloriousness, when the sun, in a cloudless sky of deepest blue, blazed down through crystal air and poured its heat and energy into the horses like charges of electricity, Jewel was almost bereft of her senses with excitement and happiness. Nothing like this had ever been known by her before. She frolicked like a yearling. She bucked and frisked and tossed her head, stood on her hind legs and pawed at nothing.

Crown Jewel Delighted With New Life, Energy

The little group of yearlings a few miles away could easily be seen through the clear air. Jewel went flying off to make friends with them Thunderhead, without even lifting his head kept an eye on all they did. Jewel returned. She always returned now. She no longer feared Thunderhead except for a seemly attention to his wishes. Once she found herself grazing close beside him. They moved slowly, almost keeping step, their sharp teeth perking left, then right, another step, and with a full mouth, the stallion raised his head high tossing his eyes in a wide circle, a glance which took in every moving thing within a radius of many miles.

All's well— and he lowered his head and again went step by step along with Jewel, their muzzles almost touching. He was not greedy. He willingly left her the good tuft of grass they were approaching. She came to feel a confidence in him. She knew that when he watched and stood guard, he stood guard for the whole herd.

But Pete was her true friend. He never entered the herd but accompanied it wherever it went, remaining always at the respectful distance of a few hundred yards. Most of the time Jewel was with him. Thunderhead had now accepted this friendship. In wintertime, when the mares are with foal, there is not so much to fear from an intruder. Besides, Pete was a gelding and not young either. It is the young stallions a herd leader fears.

So the formation of horses was like a constellation, Thunderhead the central sun with the mares his close satellites, Pete and Jewel moving on an outer circle, Ishmael all alone on another ring, the yearlings on the farthest ring of all.

The history of the state of Wyoming is the history of its grass. First the buffaloes had it and the Indians and the wild mustangs.

Before Wyoming was a state there had come to it large numbers of English and Scottish younger sons to make their fortunes. And they made not only fortunes but a most picturesque period of history.

When sheep were introduced, there was enmity between those who ran beef and those who ran sheep. The cattle were there first. The sheep nosed in. "Firemouths," they were called, from the way they nibbled the range close. In spite of many and bloody conflicts between beef owners and sheep owners the sheep were there to stay. It was finally understood that they did not spoil the range for beef, they ate different grass. They liked sage and gamma grass, not the native hay of buffalo grass which was the preferred feed.

Eventually there came to Wyoming the dry farmer with ploughs and fences.

For a few years these dry farms existed as a camel lives off its hump, feeding on the accumulations of moisture that the green grass roots have preserved in the soil.

But the plough cut and divided the sod, turning the roots up to the sun. The usual periodical drouths were more severe. Dry winds swept the plateau country and there was nothing to resist them. Moisture went out of the soil, springs and streams vanished, rivers became trickles. The range dried up and blew away.

Whole Story Depicted By Abandoned Farms

The dry farmers starved. They packed their families and beds and stoves and pots and pans and mattresses in and on the tops and sides of their rusty, ramshackle Fords, and fled from the murder they had committed, joining the processions of dustbowl refugees that rattled along the highways of the country.

The whole story was told by the gaping, windowless walls, the sagging roofs, the banging shutters of the abandoned farms. Weather beat them into insensibility. They yielded themselves to the tumbleweeds and the tin cans.

The general calamity threatened to engulf the stockman as well as the farmer. Hundreds of thousands of cattle were slaughtered to leave more of the dried grass for the few that could survive. But, thanks to the foresight of the federal and state governments and certain public-spirited citizens in reserving almost one-third of the state of Wyoming for national forests, the watersheds of the United States were protected from the ignorance and rapacity of man. There was still grass in the mountains. And the surviving herds were trailed higher and higher, following the receding snows.

The lakes, mountains, snow-covered peaks, dense forests of the national reserves saved the remnants of the herds. The eternal threat and seduction of the desert, which had almost had its way with the grasslands, could not creep beyond the foothills.

The lesson was learned. Grass! Oh, for grass again. A country halfway between tillable farm land and desert is cattle land. Heal the ugly scars by planting grass seed on the ploughed fields. Coax the prairie to put an end to the dust storms by creeping back over the gaping earth and laying over it a luscious cover of greensward.

And now, when spring comes in Wyoming, the children in school ask each other, "Have you got green grass yet? We have!" And there are jubilant answers, "We have! We have, too."

It is an event. Newspapers publish it. The whole tempo of life and business throughout the state changes. Now the mortgage can be lifted or a new one procured. Grandmother gets out of bed. Children get well of their winter ailments. Old quarrels are forgotten and forgiven, new ones start.

Memoriam

In loving memory of a dear husband, father, grandfather and greatgrandfather Christian O. Saastad who passed away Aug. 16, 1944.

There's a stairway leading upward
Which the weariest may climb
Far above the highest mountain
To an altitude sublime;
Where a Comforter awaits us,
For the Father's home is there,
And the way to mount the stairway
Is the simple way of prayer

Otter Tales

By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

A monthly column of news and information published by Otter Tail Power Company, Fergus Falls, Minnesota

Most days I'm comin' and goin' so fast I can't tell which end of a light bulb is up. But last week I took a short-cut through a fuse box down in Ortonville and got a static cramp in my left elbow. So, while I was resting up, I talked to Walt Doebbert, superintendent of the new plant there.

First thing he showed me was the big steam boiler which will run the 15,000 KW generator. This boiler is a sight to behold—it will use seven or eight carloads of North Dakota lignite every day, and it delivers steam to the turbine at a temperature of 900 degrees! (That's hotter than most any place you can think of.)

When completed around November 1, the Ortonville plant will cost about $3,500,000. That's a whale of a lot of money, but it's easy to see how fast it adds up. The power transformer shown here is just a little item — yet it weighs 89,000 pounds and cost $42,000.

No matter where you go these days, there's lots of work being done around the Otter Tail Power Company system. Some of the work now started, or soon to begin, includes relocation of the Bottineau-Rolla transmission line with a voltage increase from 14,400 to 41,600 . . . new transmission line from Rolette to Mylo . . . installation of a new 41,600 volt circuit between Max and Garrison . . . rebuilding the Valley City to Nome line . . . new 14,400 volt transmission line between Nome and Kathryn.

Lots of folks don't realize it, but Otter Tail generated four times as many kilowatt hours in 1949 as they did in 1939, increasing from 104,311,000 KWH in 1939 to 424,620,000 KWH in 1949. In spite of this rapid expansion and the staggering expenditures that go with it — our payroll, for instance, jumped from $605,000 in 1939 to $2,745,000 in 1949 — ELECTRICITY IS CHEAPER than ever before.

As a matter of fact, our rates are LOWER by 10 per cent than they were ten years ago. That's in spite of the fact that taxes have been taking a bigger chunk of our income every year — until in 1949 we paid a record breaking $2,105,000. I think that's a mighty fine example of what a tax-paying private power company can do under free enterprise.

Speaking of free enterprise, don't be too enterprising when you're moving portable farm equipment, buildings, etc., on country roads and highways. Watch for clearance under power and telephone lines. We can always string another power line but the fellow driving the equipment (and it might be you) is a lot harder to replace.

What Minnesota can do to keep America strong

A TIMELY SUGGESTION of interest to all Minnesotans appeared recently in the editorial column of the Minnetonka Record. "The iron ore industry in Minnesota belongs to all of us," wrote George Du Toit, editor. "It has been an important factor in world affairs and no less an important factor in the economy of our state. Because of the stake each of us has in this industry, we should all do what we can to insure a healthy, going concern, which is ready, willing and able to provide our very sinews in war, and be the symbol of our prosperity in peace."

Du Toit

NOBODY CAN SAY just what demands may be made of Minnesota's iron ore industry in the years ahead. But surely everyone would agree that "we should all do what we can" to make sure Minnesota is ready to supply the iron ore America needs. This state can do much to keep America strong.

You may wonder how the farmers, industrial workers, merchants and housewives of Minnesota can actually help increase the output of our iron range. Yet, in a very real sense, all Minnesotans can help if they really understand the iron ore situation. For today as never before, the ore industry vitally needs the understanding and support of every state resident.

The time is nearly here when this industry can no longer depend alone upon open pit, underground, and the simpler concentrating ores. These have gone into the tanks and liberty ships of two world wars. They have been turned into the automobiles and luxury liners, the refrigerators and skyscrapers of peacetime.

Low grade ores, too poor to ship direct, are now being concentrated in more than forty-eight big plants across the ranges. Beyond them, the iron ore industry now faces the problem of doing something with our taconite ores. Unlike other iron ore, taconite must be blasted, dug up, crushed, separated from the waste — and then built up again into chunks or pellets for the blast furnaces.

It will be a tough, expensive job — but it CAN be done. And everyone in Minnesota can help assure America of an ample supply of domestic iron ore — by encouraging and supporting the immediate, full development of taconite "manufacturing."

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

A FAIR DEAL FOR MINNESOTA'S IRON ORE MEANS A GOOD DEAL FOR YOU

Dangerous Spot

A Yankee tourist was out sightseeing in London. They took him aboard the old battleship Victory, which was Lord Nelson's flagship in several of his famous naval triumphs. An English sailor escorted the Yank over the vessel, and coming to a raised brass tablet on the deck, he said, as he reverently removed his hat:

"'Ere, sir, is the spot where Lord Nelson fell."

"Oh, is it?" replied the American blankly. "Well, that ain't nothin'. I nearly tripped on the durned thing myself."

Paid in Full

Andrew Carnegie was once visited by a Socialist who ranted against possession of great wealth, and advocated equal distribution.

Mr. Carnegie cut the speaker short by asking his secretary for a statement of his holdings, at the same time looking up the figures on world population.

When the statistics were ready, the millionaire figured for a moment. Then he said to his secretary:

"Give this gentleman 16 cents. That's his share of my wealth."

Three Stories

Here are three Samuel Goldwyn stories:

Goldwyn in a talk to his employees started off with: "Gentlemen, I want you to know that I am not always right—but I am never wrong."

And the one about some visitor admiring his wife's hands. "Yes," said Goldwyn, "she has got beautiful hands—I am thinking of having a bust made of them."

And when he decided not to join a certain undertaking by several Hollywood producers, Goldwyn said: "Gentlemen, include me out!"

THE COWARD

A Boston salesman who visited Texas heard one particular Texan boasting about heroes of the Alamo who, almost alone, held off the whole armies.

"I'll bet you never had anybody so brave around Boston," challenged the Texan.

"Did you ever hear of Paul Revere?" asked the Bostonian.

"Paul Revere?" retorted the Texan. "Isn't that the guy that ran for help?"

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U. S. Rejects Soviet Union Move To Seat China in United Nations; Marines Start Offensive in Korea

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

SECURITY COUNCIL:

No Communist Deals

"So long as men are dying on the battlefield in defense of the United Nations this council will not wish to cheapen their suffering or sully their heroism by seeming to engage in the consideration of deals."

With these words, Warren Austin, the American chief delegate to the United Nations, rejected the Russian move to link the question of Red China's entrance in the U.N. with the Korean war.

It was a bitter exchange of words between Austin and Soviet delegate Jakob A. Malik, who became president of the security council Aug. 1.

Malik wanted the question of admitting Red China to the U. N. the first order of business on the agenda, with the Korean situation second. The Russians were defeated by a vote of eight to one.

No one believed the Russians had any formula for peace that was acceptable to the western powers when they ended their boycott of the security council. It soon became evident the Russians were interested in seating Red China and nothing else.

Some believed Malik's maneuvers were only delaying tactics in the belief the North Koreans would quickly shove United Nation's troops off Korea and thus open the way for any demands the Soviet Union desired to make.

That belief became wide-spread when the Russians demanded American troops be withdrawn from Korea, under threat of use of the veto, and seat the North Koreans in security council deliberations.

On the other hand, it was just as evident that the United States would not agree to such a situation. The only outcome could be a deadlock, with the Russians resorting to the vote to kill any action the majority might sanction.

TRANSPORTATION:

Truck Fleets Increase

A for hire fleet of 1,000,000 trucks—part of the 3,000,000 which roll America's highways—is available for transport of military supplies in case of a grave national emergency, the American Trucking association has estimated.

The figure was the chief finding of an industry-wide survey conducted by the transportation organization as the first step in preparing for a possible all-out mobilization. The for hire vehicles would be the first to be mobilized and would, the association said, carry the brunt of the military ton-mile load.

But an additional 4,50,000 privately operated trucks, 2,200,000 farm trucks and 335,000 trucks under public ownership, could ultimately be made available.

Taken as a whole, the association's survey revealed the trucking industry could provide 171,369,000 inter-city ton-miles of transport facilities during the next 12 months. In 1941—the year before Pearl Harbor—the industry clocked up 57,123,000 ton miles.

That difference—114,246,000 ton-miles per year—represents the increased load of guns, food, ammunition or other military supplies which American civilian trucking firms are able and ready to handle without relying on any other form of transportation and with the full advantage of point-to-point shipment without rehandling.

EUROPE:

Steps Up Defense

The democratic nations of Europe with Communist aggression in Asia uppermost in mind formed plans for increased defense measures against invasion by Russia.

The United States and its North Atlantic allies mapped a three-year $20 billion campaign of defense.

Britain offered to adopt a three-year $9½ billion defense budget, a heavy load for the already hard pressed British government, if the U. S. foots part of the bill.

Other members of the group agreed to recommend that all member governments take immediate steps to increase effective military forces for common defense.

France meanwhile asked that more American and British troops be sent to Europe and pledged to start a $5.7 billion three-year rearmament program. The new program would be in addition to the 1950 military budget of $1.2 billion.

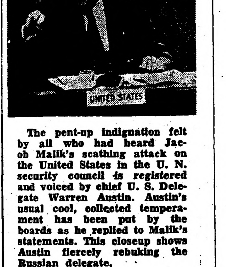
H-BOMB:

Work Continues

The United States has stepped up its work toward production of the hydrogen bomb. The government has assigned a major segment of the job to the du Pont company, already experts in making the plutonium which goes into the present atomic weapons.

The A. E. C. appointed the du Pont company to design, construct, and operate some new plants of advanced design.

Rebuke



The pent-up indignation felt by all who had heard Jacob Malik's scathing attack on the United States in the U. N. security council is registered and voiced by chief U. S. Delegate Warren Austin. Austin's usual cool, collected temperament has been put by the boards as he replied to Malik's statements. This closeup shows Austin fiercely rebuking the Russian delegate.

KOREA:

A Limited Offensive

The Korean military picture appeared a little brighter for nited Nations forces. A powerful American attack, the largest launched by the U.S. since the Korean war began, rolled slowly forward on the southern front.

The North Korean troops, evidently completely aware that an attack was coming, took advantage of every spot of cover and battled .S. marines for every foot of ground.

In the central sector the Communists established one bridgehead across the Naktong river behind which United Nations forces had established new defense positions. Military authorities reported immediate danger points were in the south and center sectors. In the center the Reds had three divisions and four of their finest in the south.

While U.N. forces attacked in the south, U.S. B-29's pounded military targets in North Korea, dropping as many as 540 tons of bombs in one day. One mass flight dropped 460 tons on railroad yards at Ppongyang, North Korea capital, with "excellent results."

Air groups from two 27,000-ton U.S. carriers bombed scattered targets over southwestern Korea and gave close support to attacking troops in the southern sector.

Military authorities warned that the southern action was a "limited offensive" and not a "general offensive." It evidently was designed to block the Communist strategy of:

(1) Drive down the southern coastal plain, capture Pusan, seal off the U.N. port of entry and the only escape hatch; (2) smash through to Taegu in the Naktong valley, encircle the defenders and cut them up.

Whether or not the Communists can execute this strategy hinges on the question: Have we the men and the materials to stop them? Until recently the outlook was grim.

BRIDGES:

Jailed at Last

Federal Judge George B. Harris revoked the $25,000 bail under which Bridges had been at liberty since his conviction last April on charges of perjury and conspiracy in connection with his 1945 naturalization, and ordered him jailed.

In delivering his opinion, Judge Harris assailed the C. I. O. labor leader as "an agent dedicated to the execution of the Communist program nationally and internationally," and a menace to United States security.

"This is not the time for divided loyalty," Judge Harris said. "This is not the time for Communist double talk."

The move to revoke Bridges' bail was started by F. Joseph Donohue, special assistant to the U. S. attorney general. Donohue argued that remarks by the labor leader at union meetings, to the effect that he opposed resolutions supporting American intervention in the Korean war, were against the best interest of the country.

Plane Crash

Nineteen persons were killed and 60 injured when a bomb laden B-29 crashed, burned and exploded near the Fairfield-Suisun air base in California.

The plane crashed near a trailer camp where 200 service families slept. The flaming explosion of the 10 or 12 500-pound demolition bombs the plane carried shattered more than half of 50 automobiles and trailers parked in the area.

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

The filly, Crown Jewel, "kidnapped by Thunderhead, the stallion is now running with his herd of mares in the Wyoming hills. Unlike the range horses, she is having difficulty adjusting herself to the winter weather and almost freezes as she waits for her sleek coat to become shaggy. Jewel is harried by Thunderhead and would like to flee from him. Her only comfort is Old Pete, the range "bum" gelding who is ever at hand when she needs him. Ishmael, a young, white colt, keeps running at the edge of the herd, despite Thunderhead's efforts to run him away. He cannot adjust to being away from his mother, Hager. News comes to Rob of Thunderhead.

CHAPTER X

It was Saturday, the twelfth of June.

Ken McLaughlin was out on the Saddle Back filling his eyes and his nostrils and his lungs and his heart with sky and plains and wind and grass.

On the peak of a ridge they stood in silent companionship, the tall, thin, seventeen-year-old boy and his mare, Flicka. He had dismounted and was leaning against her. So had they been standing for the last fifteen minutes.

They were just looking around. Ken searched the hill above the water hole some miles to the east, but it was bare of life. His eyes wandered away again, losing their focus, falling back into their dreamy contemplation.

He must not forget his errand. Again he turned his eyes to the barren hill above the water hole and in spite of its apparent emptiness he kept on looking. There were two small black bushes on the hillside near the top. Suddenly they moved. One made a dash. They were sheep dogs. Then it looked as if a wave of grey water washed over the hill and rippled down. The sheep. Three thousand of them. The whole band.

He mounted Flicka and rode slowly toward the water hole.

Jeremy, hungry, as all sheepherders are, for a breath of the outside world, was standing out in front of his wagon, eagerly awaiting his visitor.

Greetings were exchanged as Ken dismounted and threw his reins over Flicka's head Jeremy's eyes went to the saddle upon which several packages were fastened.

"Did ye bring me any magazines, Ken?"

"Sure. And some candy and a couple of records." Ken took the bundle off Flicka's saddle and handed it to Jeremy. "This one's a Spanish rumba. Hot stuff. This one's a Western."

The herder took the two records in his hands and looked at the writing.

"The Western," said Ken, pointing, "it's about—all this." He swung his arms wide.

"All what?"

"The grass. The greengrass. See the title? Green Grass of Wyoming." Jeremy read the title slowly aloud and stood thoughtfully looking at it while Ken stretching himself, gazed around with his far, dreaming gaze.

"Must have been a guy that saw all this—the greengrass, and so much of it—and wrote that song about it."

"Grass is awful plain stuff to write poetry and music about," said Jeremy thoughtfully. "Still and all, come to think about it, we live on it."

"Not us," corrected Ken. "The animals do."

"Well, the beef eats the grass and we eat the beef."

Ken laughed. "That's right." Presently he said, "I know why he wrote about the grass."

Jeremy looked up.

"It kind of—gets you," Ken explained. "I always feel that way when I've been off at school and then come back. It's so awfully big, so awfully different from anything else in the world—and yet, it's—just grass."

Howard Passes Exams For West Point Entry

Ken threw himself full length on the grass. I came up to tell you," said he, "that Dad's got Garcia and his men for the shearing. It'll be about in two weeks. He wants you to keep the sheep where they are until then if there's feed enough,"

Jeremy took a deep pull at his pipe. "There's plenty of grass here yet—the lambs are lookin' fine. Your brother home too?"

"Sure. Say—did you know Howard passed his exams and is ordered to report at West Point on the Fourth of July?"

"That ain't no news! He took them exams last January. He got the notice he had passed in April, the wire to your Dad came through the telegraph agent over to Tie Siding, an' he spread the news— I bet I had it afore your Dad did. And I kin tell you sumpin' else too. Your Dad went into Cheyenne and painted the town red. Waal, he ended up at the Post, and the Army officers give him a dinner of congratulation, and they did say your Dad got tight as a tick. But, say! Who'd blame him? Sixteen thousand dollars! That ain't a minnow—that's a good big wad of dough."

"Sixteen thousand dollars?" said Ken. "What you givin' me?"

"Sure. That's what it takes to put a boy through West Point. When Howard passed them exams he put sixteen thousand dollars in your Dad's pocket, or words to that effect. Say, Ken, any other news down at your place?"

Ken thought hard, then shook his head.

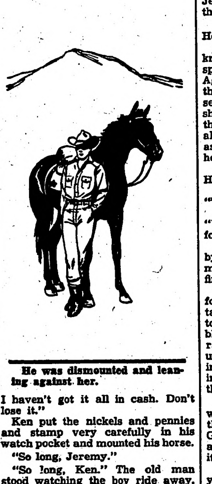
They continued to talk until the light changed. Most of the sheep were drawing nearer to the fold for their evening feed of cotton cake.

Ken said, "I've got to go." He put his hand in his pocket and took out a small paper. "Here's the receipt for the letter Dad took to town and had registered for you."

The herder took it and rummaged in his pocket. "I owe your Dad fifteen cents for the registration fee."

"Yes, he told me to bring it."

Here's two nickels and three pennies and a two cent stamp. Sorry I haven't got it all in cash. Don't lose it."



He was dismounted and leaning against her.

Ken put the nickels and pennies and stamp very carefully in his watch pocket and mounted his horse.

"So long, Jeremy."

"So long, Ken." The old man stood watching the boy ride away, then went into his wagon and played the Western again.

Ken heard it as he rode along the crest. The music had a poignant wistfulness, drifting to him across the space.

Eastward bound Number Twenty-One roared into the Cheyenne station at 6:45 P.M.

The McLaughlins, with the exception of Nell and Penny, were on the platform to meet it; Rob, very conservative-looking, in an English tweed suit, Howard in striped blue flannels and a sport coat, Ken in his best suit of grey French flannel. The two tall, sunburned boys were bareheaded, their dark hair a little rough, their collars open, their blue eyes eager.

The train slowed down and the white-coated porter stepped off and swung luggage down. Carey was the first passenger to be seen.

"How's the girl?" cried Rob helping her down and giving her a kiss.

"Hello, Mr. McLaughlin."

"Hello, Carey."

"Hello, Ken; hello, Howard."

"Hello, Carey." They all shook hands. She gave the porter the tip she had ready, the boys grabbed her suitcases and there was the usual scramble of talk which said nothing and made Ken feel both uncomfortable and excited.

Wyoming Green Grass—Much Like "Magic"

Rob McLaughlin took her by the arm and steered her across the platform. "We're going to have dinner at the Plains Hotel."

"Mother didn't come because she didn't like to leave Penny," said Howard. "She sends her love."

"How is the baby?" Carey addressed this to Ken, looking over her shoulder at him.

"She's okay." He tried to think of something else to say. "Gee, Carey—" It seemed inadequate and ridiculous, but Carey gave him a glance and it went through him and warmed him. Perhaps she knew all that "Gee, Carey" meant.

The hotel dining-room was crowded. They had a round table in the middle of it They asked the correct and formal questions of each other at first, little by little gathering up the threads of each other's lives and beginning to feel at ease again. Then Carey wanted to know if they had had any knews of Buck Daly? Had he located Thunderhead and his band of mares? Had he seen Jewel?

Rob explained that he was in Fox Park trailing them, had not yet seen them, but might at any time, and asked, "What races are you going to put her in, Carey, when you get her back?"

"First, the American Grand National at Belmont Park, in November," said Carey, calmly, and Ken gasped.

Rob laughed. "Two and a half mile steeplechase! That'll be some going for a youngster."

"That is," said Carey, "if she's in condition. We don't know if she's been hurt. She mightn't be able to run."

"You don't need to worry about that," said Rob. "She's been in charge of a range stallion, remember, and she's on Wyoming greengrass."

"Wyoming greengrass," murmured Carey, feeling the lilt of the words. "It sounds like something magic."

"It is, believe me!" said Rob. "This country up here does something for horses that is out of this world. Gives them strong lungs, staying power, makes them hard. Jewel will be in better condition than she has ever been in before."

"Oh, it's the green grass!" sang Howard softly.

Some Army officers whom Rob knew came by and stopped to speak. The boys got up and stood. Again, the talk was of Jewel and the expedition which was to be sent out to get her and of the races she would run in. Her frame, and the interest of her story, had gone all over the state. The officers asked who was going out to get her?

"We're all of us going," said Howard.

Colonel Harris looked at him. "This is the Cadet, isn't it?"

Howard grinned and nodded. "Yes, sir. My last vacation here for two years."

Colonel Harris shook him warmly by the hand. "Welcome to our midst, Howard. Rob, couldn't you find a better fate to wish on him?"

Rob went over to their table for a few minutes and now the boys talked more freely. They wanted to know about last fall, after the blizzard, when Carey had left the ranch with her Grandma and uncle. Had she got an awful bawling out from her Grandma for having gone with Ken in the pick-up to the Monument?

Carey shook her head. Her face was contrite. "Oh, it wasn't like that, it was just that it made Grandma ill, she was so worried about me. I shouldn't have done it."

"Is she coming down here with your uncle when we go out after the horses?"

"Of course," said Carey, "your mother has asked her."

The boys looked at each other. Ken said, "But this summer, won't you go along with us?"

Boys Urge Carey To Join in Search

Carey looked doubtful. "I don't think Grandma would ever let me do that There won't be any other woman along."

"But Dad is going this time! And your uncle!"

"Look what happened to me last fall. She'll never get over that"

"But that was because of bad weather. Now it's summertime. It'll just be like going off on a summer horseback trip with a lot of fun and excitement thrown in."

Carey heaved a deep sigh. "Oh, I wish I could! I'd give anything to!"

Howard said firmly, "There isn't a reason in the world why you should not go. Any other girl would—any other girl's mother would let her go. You ought to show a little spunk. If your uncle says you can go, then just take a stand!"

"But it might make her ill!"

The two boys looked at each other. What would you do if someone got sick every time you did anything that was fun?

"Cripes, Carey!" said Howard, "You've got a problem child on your hands. I don't see how you can take it!"

Carey's wide eyes took on a worried expression. "Well, but Howard," she said, "you obey your father—and your mother too!"

"But they're reasonable!" exclaimed Howard. "Your grandmother treats you as if you were a little girl."

Ken said persuasively "Mother says that everyone in the world has a special problem to solve. I guess she's yours. I don't think you ought to knuckle under when there's no sense in the things she makes you do."

"But she's not well," Carey staunchly defended her.

"I think she just puts half of that on to make you do what she wants!"

Carey looked doubtful. "That's what Uncle Beaver thinks. At least, sometimes he does. He says I ought to assert myself. I would like to go to college."

"However did you get to come down and visit us?" asked Ken.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Foodstuffs mailed at Christmas time should be packed with special care. Cookies are the commonest casualties, but they can be protected by packing them in alternate layers with marshmallows or popcorn.

Fruit cake can be kept indefinitely if you wrap it in a damp towel. The towel can be dampened with plain water, but it's better with wine.

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES

As we get older, stress and strain, overexertion, excessive smoking or exposure to cold sometimes slows down kidney function. This may lead many folks to complain of nagging backache, loss of pep and energy, headaches and dizziness. If your discomforts are due to these causes, don't wait, try Doan's Pills, a mild diuretic. Used successfully by millions for over 50 years. Electric rates of private power companies have been reduced 17 per cent in the past ten years -- by sound management and mass production technique. Yet, the "fairy tale" of even cheaper power through municipal ownership frequently pops up. Actually, "cheap municipal power" just isn't! Municipal power isn't cheap . . . IT'S SUBSIDIZED! Every taxpayer (including the private utilities which municipal power tends to destroy) foots the bill. There is no substitute for the vigor of tax-paying, privately operated power companies.

Don't believe in "fairy tales".

Your electric company -- a development of free enterprise through private initiative -- is your best source of low-cost electricity.

"FAIRNESS . . . that's what I like about LAND O'LAKES"

. . . says HARRY POSTER, Foley (Minn.) dairyman

When Harry Poster says "Farmers always get fair treatment at LAND O'LAKES," he should know what he's talking about. For he has marketed through LAND O'LAKES creameries ever since it was organized. Today, he sells the milk from 22 Holsteins on his 280-acre farm through a LAND O'LAKES member plant, the Foley Co-operative Creamery Association—"a mighty good organization." "It just makes sense," he says, "for farmers to own their own dairy plant and marketing organization." Because LAND O'LAKES makes savings for its farmer-owners at three levels—processing; distribution; and marketing. It pays to market through LAND O'LAKES!

No Deer Hunt Season in 1950

A state-wide closed season for deer this year was announced today by Chester S. Wilson, Commissioner of Conservation, on recommendation of Frank D. Blair, Director of Game and Fish after reviewing the reports of deer conditions throughout the state at a meeting of Game and Fish Division officials and biologists.

In some areas there are plenty of deer to stand hunting. However, the present distribution of the herds is very irregular, in large sections, especially in the northeast of the state, severe conditions last winter and spring took a heavy toll of yearling fawns, as well as new fawns born early in the spring. This resulted in a considerable loss of future breeding stock in those areas. Because of the irregular shape and size of depleted areas, it is impossible to work out an effective zoning plan for closing them while opening other areas where deer are more plentiful. Therefore, we have decided to close the whole state to build up the breeding stock for the future.

Cases of deer damage in the farming regions will be handled by special control measures as far as necessary, with the cooperation of local farmers and sportsmen's clubs.

—WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS—

Showdown Battle Looms in Korea; Jacob Malik Stops U. N. Action; House Votes Home-Front Controls

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

KOREA:
Showdown Near

On the fifth anniversary of the liberation of Korea from Japan, Communist and United Nations troops were involved in a series of maneuvers and probing thrusts that indicated a showdown battle was near.

In the north the Communists made their most important gains with the capture of Pohang and forcing U.S. troops to evacuate an important airfield. American and South Korean forces were in action against a Red unit west of that city.

In the west, the Communists had crossed the Naktong river at two points, north and south of Taegu. At one point 12,000 Red troops had crossed the river and counter attacking Americans attempted to throw them back with some success.

The Communists were reported to have 60,000 men massed in that area for the all-out drive to push United Nations forces from Korea.

In the south, U.S. marines consolidated their positions just four miles outside Chinju and continued to mop up isolated Red groups cut off by the American drive.

Military observers reported the Communist time-table had been upset by the stubborn defense of U.S. and South Korean forces. The Reds had set August 15 as the date for final victory and their so-called "liberation" of South Korea. A final and desperate attempt to gain that victory seemed but a matter of hours.

Meanwhile, American jet fighters and bombers continued raids on North Korean installations and ground positions. One striking force dropped 625 tons of bombs in a raid on an oil refinery.

The Navy announced the first combat use of a new rocket-type missile, the Tiny Tim, a 11.75-inch armor-piercing rocket. The rocket was credited with knocking out 13 Communist locomotives and destroying a bridge.

HOME-FRONT:
Truman Gets Power

The house voted, 383 to 12, a broad home-front mobilization bill that gave the President power to control prices and wages, ration consumer goods and impose industrial curbs to speed up the war effort. The senate also had a similar bill under consideration.

Some kind of control bill had been expected for some time, but there were several surprising aspects to the one the house voted. In the first place, the vote of 383 to 12 was startling. But even more startling was the fact the house, which usually jealously guards its authority and power, left it entirely up to the President when to invoke the price-wage-rationing and other control powers contained in the bill.

Mr. Truman insisted he was not ready for severe restrictions upon civilian economy. And although the bill gives him that power, it is not believed that such broad scale mobilization is in sight. However, the administration is reported anxious to use some of the industrial controls, particularly the power to allocate scarce materials to war industries.

If and when the President invokes controls, the bill stipulates he must peg wages at the May 24-June 25 level. For prices he would have to give only "due consideration" to the period as a base.

The bill would:

(1) Give the President authority to impose wage and price controls and rationing at any time he deems necessary.

(2) Make it a criminal offense, punishable by a $10,000 fine and a year in jail, to hoard food, clothing, automobile tires and other "necessaries."

(3) Authorize the President to exercise consumer credit controls similar to those used during World War II.

(4) Authorize the President to requisition materials and factories necessary to the defense effort.

(5) Let the President set up a system of priorities and allocations for getting strategic and critical materials to defense plants.

(6) Authorize the government to make or guarantee loans for defense purpose. The total of loans outstanding at any one time could not exceed $2 billion.

ESPIONAGE:
Suspect No. 7

Mrs. Ethel Greenglass Rosenberg, 34, mother of two children, was arrested by the F.B.I. as suspect No. 7 in the Harry Gold-Dr. Klaus Fuchs atom spy case. She was held under $100,000 bail.

Her 32-year-old husband also is under $100,000 bond. The F.B.I. said when he was arrested July 17 that he belonged to a spy ring financed by Anatoli Yakovlev, former Soviet vice consul in New York.

American Armor

A sight to cheer the GI's who fought the first holding actions against the North Korean Communists was the line of medium tanks, shown as they moved up the front lines to add their weight to the battle. Such tanks are often dug in and used as pillboxes.

UNITED NATIONS:
Anger and Frustration

Delegates to the U. N. security council watched with disgust as Russia's Jacob A. Malik blocked every move of the Organization to continue with its business after two weeks under his chairmanship.

Non-Communist delegates were angered and frustrated by his tactics, but were resigned to waiting it out until his chairmanship ended today, August 31 and Sir Gladwyn Jebb of Britain takes over.

Malik's strategy had been designed to stall any action of the organization on the Korean situation and to create as much propaganda as possible for the Communist cause. Some quarters believed that Malik scored some success along that line.

He continued to drum the theme that South Korea started the war and accused the United States of using "inhuman and barbarous methods of waging war in Korea."

The western delegates hit back much more forcefully than ever before. U.S. delegate Warren Austin pinned the responsibility for the North Korean invasion on the Russians—as the men behind the men behind the guns. Sir Gladwyn made biting attacks on the entire philosophy under which the Kremlin operates.

The western attack seemed to hit home. Malik seemed a little harassed at times and talked much faster and gestured more often.

Malik stated during one of the rounds that the only Russian arms possessed by the North Koreans were those "we sold to them when Soviet forces withdrew from Korea." It was the first time Malik or any other Soviet leader has admitted that North Koreans were using Soviet weapons.

The statement exposed Malik as a liar before the world because late model weapons have been captured from the Communists that were not even developed at the time the Russians were supposed to have withdrawn from North Korea. One such weapon was a late model mortar shell.

POLITICS:
An Issue Found

Four important Republican senators, members of the foreign relations committee, issued as indictment of Democratic diplomatic failures, charging the administration's policy invited Russia "to grab whatever it could in China, Korea, and Formosa."

Senators Wiley of Wisconsin, Smith of New Jersey, Hickenlooper of Iowa and Lodge of Massachusetts signed the statement that demanded the United States take immediate steps to "regain the initiative and the power for the organization and preservation of lasting peace, which it threw away in 1945."

The senators charged that the administration was responsible for "the disintegration of our armed forces in 1945," evidently forgetting that Republicans and Democrats both answered the screams of mothers and fathers throughout the nation to let their boys come home.

Republican leaders said they will discuss this issue in the congressional campaigns and expect their national committee soon to lay down a documentary "white paper" to support their position.

In other words, the Republicans believed they had found an issue for the coming political campaigns.

Income Up

The national production of goods and services boomed up to an annual rate of nearly 270 billion dollars in the second quarter of 1950, the commerce department announced. It is the highest quarter on record.

The 270-billion mark represented a sharp climb from the annual rate of 254 billion in the last quarter of 1949, and 263 billion in the first quarter of 1950.

WALLACE:
Makes Up His Mind

Henry A. Wallace resigned from the Progressive party. In a short (only two paragraphs) letter to his former political aide, C. B. Baldwin, he wrote:

"In view of actions recently taken by the national committee of the Progressive party and the various state committees, I am convinced I can more effectively serve the cause of peace by resigning from the national committee and the executive committee of the Progressive party.

"You will, therefore, take this letter as my formal resignation from the party."

It was the third time that Wallace has broken off political affiliations, and, some observers pointed out, a confession on his part that the Progressive party is too left wing for even his tastes.

He started his political career as an Iowa Republican. When the New Deal came into power in 1933, Mr. Wallace became a Democrat, first as secretary of agriculture and then Vice-President of the United States in Franklin D. Roosevelt's third term. In 1946 he quit the Democratic party and his cabinet post. In 1948 he was the Progressive party's candidate for president. His Candidacy, polling 500,000 votes in New York, cost Mr. Truman the empire state but not the election.

In recent days, the question has been whether Wallace would accept the Progressive's foreign policy line, obviously dictated by Communists in the party.

TAXATION:
Cost Will Be High

The senate finance committee served notice that the cost of war in Korea would be higher with its unanimous approval of increased individual income taxes amounting to about $3 billion.

The senate and house were expected to approve the legislation.

Main points of the bill:

1. Dig deeper into the pockets of more than 50,000,000 individual taxpayers October 1. Withholding of wages and salaries, after personal exemption, will jump from the present 15 per cent to 18 per cent.

2. The actual increase in taxes will be around 20 per cent for millions of persons in the lower income brackets. For 1950, the present tax would apply on three-fourths of income, and the higher rates on one-fourth. In 1951 and thereafter the higher rates would apply on all income.

3. GI's fighting in Korea would pay no tax at all, and their officers would get reductions in their taxes, too. The tax exemption would not apply to servicemen and service women outside the war zones.

PROPAGANDA:
Straight to Cemetery

Russian propaganda at times has been ridiculous. The newest blast was directed against American football.

Radio Moscow said recently: "Football players at the University of Michigan are often carried from the football field to the hospital or even straight to the cemetery."

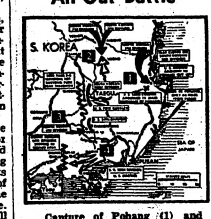
Moscow pictured American athletes driven to slaughter by greedy promoters. In fact, Moscow cried that it all was inspired by Wall Street to get the American public conditioned for war.

In retaliation, the Voice of America offered to buy a season pass for any accredited Russian correspondent who wants to see the University of Michigan football team play.

Said the U. S.:

"The voice will gladly offer a season's pass to all games of the University of Michigan to an accredited U.S.S.R. correspondent to see for himself. We can assure him that he'll have no expense for flowers or wreaths."

All-Out Battle



Capture of Pohang (1) and U. S. last ditch defense of air strip highlight Korean war news. Reds mass tanks (2) for attack near Waegwan. A battle raged at the Pugong-ni (3) bridgehead. In the south (4) the three-pronged U. S. advance stopped at outskirts of Chinju.

CHURCHILL:
The Old War-Horse

Winston Churchill roared again in the consultative assembly of the Council of Europe, warning of Europe's weaknesses and stating flatly that America's atomic bombs shielded Europe from Communist aggression. He proposed a unified army for Europe and the council approved by a vote of 89 to 5.

A number of critics said the old war-horse had gone too far, but others considered it a major victory.

The Economical Thing

The young wife greeted her husband affectionately when he returned from the office.

"Poor darling!" she said. "You must be tired and hungry. Would you like some nice soup followed by nice tender chops with golden-brown potatoes and green peas and then mushrooms on toast?"

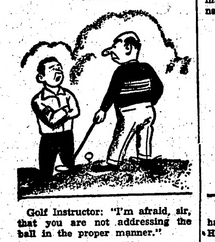
"No, darling," her husband answered firmly; "let's save the money and eat at home."

Apt Pupil

Joe: How long did it take your wife to learn to drive?

Bill: It'll be ten years this fall.

APOLOGIZE, SIR!



Golf Instructor: "I'm afraid, sir, that you are not addressing the ball in the proper manner."

Would-be Golfer: "Oh, nonsense. Surely it's not necessary to be so confoundedly formal."

Convenient Disability

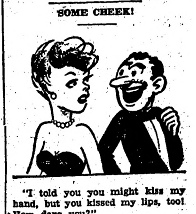
The chairman of the central committee was receiving reports from the country committees.

"Things never looked better for a clean sweep for the Republican ticket than they do this fall," reported one county Warwick. "It's dollars to doughnuts that we'll even elect the candidate for judge of probate."

"What makes that so important?" the chairman asked.

"Well, you see the Democrats put up a man who had only one arm several years ago and we've never been able to overcome the appeal of that empty sleeve. But he's our meat this time, boys. We Republicans have nominated a man who is paralyzed from his neck up!"

SOME CHEEK!



"I told you you might kiss my hand, but you kissed my lips, too! How dare you?"

"Oh, a hand-to-mouth existence is good enough for me!"

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING
By Mary O'Hara

Ken visits Jeremy, the sheepherder, and they talk of Thunderhead and many other things as the sheepman seeks to dispel his loneliness. Ken announces that his brother, Howard, has passed the entrance exams for the U. S. military academy at West Point. This is no news as Jeremy has already heard it. Ken announces that he and Howard are to be godfathers when their little sister, Penny, is baptized. Jeremy recalls that Rob promised to have that done a year ago, and didn't. Rob, Ken and Howard meet Carey in Cheyenne and all the talk is of the search to find Crown Jewel. Carey is urged to join the search party.

CHAPTER XI

Carey laughed. "Well it was just luck. You see, when your father wrote to Uncle Beaver to tell him he had sent Buck Daly out to locate the horses he said at the end of the letter that your mother was writing inviting me down right away for a visit. And that same day my Grandma received the letter from your mother, inviting me. Grandma was writing to say I couldn't go until they all went. But Uncle Beaver wired your mother and said I could come, and then told Grandma what he had done. So there wasn't any use in her finishing her letter."

The boys laughed loudly. Howard seemed to have a morbid interest in the strange psychology of Mrs. Palmer "Was she mad?" he asked hopefully.

But Carey gave him no satisfaction. "She didn't like it very well," she said in a reserved manner.

"Gee! I'm glad you came," said Ken.

"So'm I." Carey's eyes were on her plate.

"We'll have a lot of fun!" said Howard.

On the drive home, Carey sat behind, between the two boys, and asked them why the officers had called Howard "the Cadet." They explained. Carey looked at Howard almost with reverence, then gravely shook his hand and said, "Congratulations, Cadet McLaughlin."

Ken writhed inwardly. Was it going to be like this? Would Howard be the one she looked at and admired? It was tough having your girl see you always with your elder brother who was handsome and full of teasing talk and funny ideas and would soon have a West Point uniform on.

"He's got a girl," Ken blurted out.

"Oh, has he?"

"Hey! What are you giving us!" exclaimed Howard.

"Yes he has, her name's Barbara Bingham and he's got her picture in a case in his pocket and a big one in his room and he gets two or three airmail letters from her every week."

Ken got all the evidence out before he could be interrupted. But Howard was nonchalant. He winked at Carey and said, "So what?"

Carey kept looking at him smilingly and wonderingly. Ken leaned back in his corner and sat silent and glum.

At the ranch, Nell took the girl into her arms and gave her a warm embrace. Carey had fallen in love with Nell the summer before. To be taken in her arms and hugged and then kissed on both cheeks, with Nell's tender, dark blue eyes smiling a welcome, almost made a lump come into her throat. This was the way mothers were.

That night, when Carey put her head on the pillow, she heard a hoot owl calling plaintively. The next morning, it seemed, she rolled over and stretched her arms, yawning, and the blue-and-white striped sleeves of her pajamas slid to her shoulder, and it was morning, and there was a different smell, smell of coffee, and bacon, and the faraway sound of a bull roaring.

Nell had turned over Redwing for Carey's use. This time Carey was equipped with her own riding clothes. They were all unpacked, and hung neatly with her other things in the pine-scented closets of her room, with her riding boots and shoes in a row underneath. In the mornings, with riding and stable work ahead of her, she wore blue-jeans and a cotton shirt. In the evenings, she would put on one of her ruffled summer dresses and win an approving smile from Rob.

The evenings were long and light. It seemed as if, in the gentle twilight hours, the fruit of the day was gathered up and eaten. Sometimes Nell and Carey played duets. Sometimes they all sat on the terrace and talked while the animals hung around turning their curious and affectionate eyes upon the different members of the family.

On one such evening Ken suggested to Carey that they walk down the meadows to Castle Rock.

Carey glanced around. She was sitting on the steps of the terrace, watching the puppies playing.

Ken Proposes Carey Join Him in Walk

"How about it, Carey?"

Carey had heard about Castle Rock. The boys had told her of the finding of the carcass of Rocket's foal there, half-devoured by the wildcat, and of all the other skeletons and grisley remains in the caves under the rock. She would like to see it. And an evening walk alone with Ken through the meadows—the thought slightly quickened her pulse. Still, there was a deliciousness about this family group on the terrace after supper and she was reluctant to leave it.

Howard, chinning himself on one of the poles of the pergola, said, "Why don't you take your gun? I'll come along and we'll get some cottontails."

Nell was coming out the door. "Don't shoot any cottontails today. We have more meat on hand than we need. I want to talk to you, Howard."

Nell sat down in the hammock and Ken and Carey started off.

Howard stood looking down at his mother questioningly. Her face was merry as she looked back at him. There was a little teasing grin. She patted the hammock beside her and he fitted himself "Why," she said, taking hold of his hands which were clasped across her chest, "do you want to cut out Ken with Carey?"

"Wha-a-at?" exclaimed Howard. "Why, Mother!"

"Don't 'Why Mother' me," she said trying to pull out of his arms, but he held her tight. "I'm on to you. But what I really want to ask you about is Barbara Bingham."

All her senses were alert, and clasped against his chest as she was, she could feel the slight reaction of his body to this name—a tension, a waiting.

"Howard, you are so secretive!" she cried. "Why do you make a mystery about this girl?"

"I don't make any mystery." He rubbed his chin on her hair tenderly.

"I like Barbara's looks, judging from the pictures of her you have around, but if she is to be my daughter-in-law, I'd like to know it."

Howard made no answer to this, and Nell muttered impatiently, "Oh, you make me tired!" She struggled to free herself, Howard released her, stood up, then stooped, gave her a quick kiss and leaped off the terrace. He walked down to the cowbarn. Nell sat, touching her foot to the ground, so that the hammock swung a little.

Men Gossip Away The Long Evenings

There came a deep roar from the corral of the cowbarn. Usually, after evening milking and feeding was over, the bull was quiet. Sometimes he went out to pasture with the cows, sometimes, even when the cows had left him, he remained in the corral where he had received his feed, standing there motionless in one of his dark meditations upon the primal joys of blood and lust. He appeared to live in a chronic state of smoldering fury, viewing any person, any moving thing, any life outside himself, as something which it was his duty to put an end to. Even the calves were not safe with him. Only the cows.

"Rob," said Nell, "I wish you'd sell Cricket, or have him butchered."

Rob made no answer. He was absorbed in trying to discover what Penny had, shut up in one small fist. He tried to open the wee fingers. She resisted him and squirmed in his grasp.

"Rob!" said Nell.

"Oh, he's all right," said Rob, "now that I've put the ring in his nose. It's Howard he's yelling at." He raised his voice. "Howard!" he shouted. "Cut that out!"

"I'm not doing anything," Howard shouted back, then wandered up from the cowbarn to the bunkhouse. The men were sitting out-of-doors on the wooden benches which flanked the front door. Here they gossiped the long evenings away, falling into silence when music came from Nell's piano. Howard joined them. Cricket ceased his bellowings. And Nell's foot touched the ground, and gave her hammock a little push, and another, and another, . . . She wondered where Pilgrim was and her eyes wandered, searching. She knew he was looking at her from some hideout, from the grass behind the spring house, from the trees under the cliff, or the edge of the path leading up to the barn, but she could see no sign of him. She put Willy down. Willy picked up a leaf, lifted his head proudly and trotted down the terrace carrying it with an important air.

The long winding hay meadows of the ranch had their names, names which had never been given them, which had just come to be. The closest to the house was called the Home Meadow. The next was Crooked Meadow, because of the torturous twists and turns of Lone Tree Creek winding through it. The farthest meadow was called Castle Rock because, overhanging the aspen grove at the far end was the great rock, jutting up seventy feet high, as big as a house, constructed in the strangest manner with parapets and turrets and balconies and and underneath it the chambers of horrors which the boys had described so vividly to Carey.

Now she stood in one of them, in pitch darkness. Ken was there beside her but she could not see him and he did not make a sound. It was frightening. She made a little murmur of fear and felt Ken's hand reaching out, asking for hers. She gave it to him and he clasped it tight and then, standing so, the fear left her. It became a thrilling experience, and it was hard not to breathe in such a way that Ken would know how she felt. Gradually her eyes became accustomed to the dark and she was able to follow him about from one cavern to the other, inspecting the bones and skeletons.

Then they climbed the great rock, Ken helping her in the difficult places, and at last they were up on one of the high platforms at the very top, lifted into the freshness of the evening sky.

Carey skipped about. She put her head back and lost herself in the soft indigo depths of the heavens. She scanned all the wilderness of the plains and the rolling hills. And she chattered to Ken.

They were never tired of discussing the events of last fall. It was like having the adventures all over again. Carey told Ken what she had done at the Monument after he had ridden away with the men. How Cookie had saddled the roan for her and told her to go off and have a ride, and how she had gone, and climbed up the little cone-shaped hill, and then, at the very top, had taken out her binoculars and had seen Thunderhead ten miles away or so, standing up on the top of a peak like the statue of a horse, looking right back at her.

Ken Shows Jealousy Of Howard, Carey

"You've seen him since I have," said Ken jealously.

"But you'll see him soon now, Ken. You're going to get him back."

"Maybe," said Ken, who was in a despondent mood.

"That's what you want more than anything else in the world, isn't it?"

"I don't know."

"You said last summer the thing you wanted more than anything in the world was to get him back and ride him in one more race."

"I know I did."

"Don't you still want to?"

"Yes, but," he turned his face to look at her with a glance half wary, half bold, "but now—what I want most has something to do with you, I think. I feel as if I would want most in the world to do something for you."

Their eyes met timidly, slid away again. It seemed a huge admission Ken had made and he hastened to cover it up.

"What do you want most? Oh, I know! You want to be a singer."

"No."

"Then a concert pianist."

"No."

"Well, what then? Or don't you know, either?"

"Yes, I know perfectly well. I want to be a mother and have about eight lovely children! Oh, I think that would be the most wonderful thing in the world!"

Ken frowned. "You're too young to be thinking of things like that, Carey. Why, you're only sixteen."

"But my mother married when she was seventeen, and she must have been thinking about it before then, so why can't I? Why I'm a woman, Ken!"

SCHUMAN

PEACE!

Since the end of World War II, our fumbling foreign policy has spent 100 billions of dollars of our taxpayers' money in an effort to stop the ever-expanding spread of communist aggression throughout the world. As a nation, we are slowly learning that communist ideologies cannot be stopped by tanks and guns. Our present policy of international hatred and war has taught three-fourths of the world's population to hate us, and is only leading our country into national bankruptcy and threatens mankind with atomic oblivion. The spread of communism can only be stopped by an Ideology BETTER than communism itself. It will continue to spread until we as a nation—and the rest of the world—adopt the long-forgotten philosophies of the Prince of Peace, realize we are all "our brother's keeper". We speak lightly of the "brotherhood of man" living under the common Fatherhood of God. We whisper it, and do not practice it. It is Christianity long ago buried beneath the massive walls of man's giant cathedrals—an Ideology never mentioned by the press or the radio—and seldom mentioned from the pulpits of Modern Religion!

Glenn Schuman believes in that Philosophy. He believes we should get behind Trygve Lie's efforts toward peace and world disarmament. Glenn Schuman's platform includes support of the Brannan Farm Plan, repeal of the Taft-Hartly Law, favors a Federal Housing law to provide better homes for our people, and a National Health Plan to provide adequate medical care for people in low income brackets. He opposes a general sales tax in Minnesota, and believes the Federal Government should undertake flood control measures in the Red River Valley through the Bureau of Reclamation.

These experiments can mean big things to you

MINNESOTA'S SHRINKING SUPPLY of iron ore was the subject of an interesting editorial that recently appeared in the Claremont News. "Heretofore," wrote Dana A. Hinckley, publisher, "it has not been a matter of too much concern to this, a strictly agricultural community, but it is now realized that this is far more than merely a community problem. We have millions of tons of taconite in this state that might be used to replace the dwindling high grade ore. But the taconite is extremely difficult to mine and to process. It is the mother lode of the high grade ore and the iron is not deposited in concentrated form. It will take several years of experimenting and millions of dollars' investment to make its use practical."

Hinckley

WHEN YOU LOOK AT THE FACTS, it's easy to see that these costly taconite experiments mean a great deal both to Minnesota and to you . . .

FACT 1: NEW CONSTRUCTION. If the taconite experiments are successful, great new "ore manufacturing plants" will blossom in Minnesota. Putting them up and equipping them for use will provide work for a small army of Minnesota construction workers, and important business for many a Minnesota firm!

FACT 2: NEW YEAR-'ROUND JOBS. With full-scale taconite production, thousands of steady jobs can be created in this state. Producing taconite concentrate takes twice the manpower, compared with high-grade ore, and work will go on 12 months a year.

FACT 3: NEW FARM MARKETS. With larger iron ore payrolls, there will naturally be more demand for the crops of Minnesota farmers.

FACT 4: NEW MARKETS FOR SUPPLIES. Because the new taconite industry will be a manufacturing industry, there will be great new markets for many kinds of materials and supplies in Minnesota.

Yes, every Minnesotan stands to gain if the taconite program develops as it should.

And there's no reason why it can't be successful if all those in a position to promote its growth do all they can to help. Even now, highly-trained men are working in the laboratories and pilot plants to make the taconite dream come true. Backing them up with millions of research dollars are the present producers of iron ore in this state.

Every Minnesotan can be glad that these things are taking place. Every Minnesotan has reason to hope they will soon bear fruit.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

At one time President Wilson was riding along a country road near Washington accompanied only by the secret service man who was detailed to guard him. They passed a small boy by the roadside. Presently the President turned to his companion and said:

"Did you see what that boy did?"

"No sir; what did he do?"

"He made a face at me," said the President, shaking his head gravely.

The secret service man was shocked. The President waited a moment and then asked:

"Did you see what I did?"

"No, sir."

"Well," said the President with a twinkle in his eye, "I made a face right back at him."

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Korea Military Picture Improved; Senate Passes Mobilization Bill; Nation's Farmers in 'Fine Shape'

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

KOREA:

Picture Changes

As the Korean war went into the third month military observers were inclined to comment "the picture has changed." And from available information it seemed the Communists had lost the power to mount great offensives involving thousands of men.

North Koreans launched one attack in force, its objective the city of Taegu, temporary capital of the South Korean republic and supply terminal for U. N. forces. It failed.

In some of the bloodiest fighting of the war, U. S. and South Korean troops smashed the offensive, held Taegu, and then proceeded to smash bulges all along their lines.

One of the most spectacular operations of the Korean battle was the concentrated air attack on an assembly area at Waegwan, involving 98 B-29's each loaded with 40 500-pound all purpose bombs. The load was dropped in a rectangle 7½ miles long and 3½ miles wide.

General MacArthur, commander of United Nations forces, in a report to the security council said: "The ground fighting continues to be of the most savage character." Our outnumbered forces face an enemy with "almost fanatical determination. The whole operation has assumed the character of a major campaign." He went on to ask for troops from other members of the United Nations.

To date the number accepted for action in Korea included Thailand 4,000, the Philippines 5,000, Turkey 4,500, and the United Kingdom 7,500. It will be several weeks before they can be brought to battle.

Military observers agreed that the picture had changed, but added that it will be "a long and hard winter in Korea."

FARMERS:

In Fine Shape

In a major speech at Carlisle, Indiana, Secretary of Agriculture Brannan asserted that the nation's farmers are in "fine shape" and took the opportunity to put in another plug for his farm plan.

Said the secretary: "Even allowing for increases in military food requirements we expect to have enough food so that civilians can continue consuming as much as in the past two years."

Farmers worried about possible economic controls of agriculture were reassured when the secretary said there are grounds for hope that such controls can be postponed for a considerable time or perhaps avoided entirely—"unless the emergency becomes much worse."

Talking up the Brannan plan, the secretary said we need a program which "solidly protects farm prices in case of a sudden slackening of demand" yet "puts an abundance of milk, eggs, and other perishables in the hands of consumers at attractive prices."

Brannan added that the present program of sliding-scale price supports fail to assure support on some of the most important commodities and offers no incentive for necessary production shifts.

WHEAT:

Highest Level

The agricultural department has fixed price supports for 1951 wheat at the same level as the 1950 crop —90 per cent of parity.

The department said 72,800,000 acres of wheat may be planted. If yields are average, this acreage would produce 1,150,000,000 bushels. This year's crop is estimated at 996,000,000 bushels.

In fixing the wheat support at the highest possible level, Secretary of Agriculture Brannan said:

"In view of the world situation, it is imperative that our supply of bread grains be maintained in strong position. Ample supplies will be a major factor in assuring reasonable food prices to consumers and our ability to meet our international food obligations.

"We believe the wheat-production and price-support programs have been developed to protect the interests of both producers and consumers."

The price support announcement had been expected, since Brannan is required by law to announce supports in advance of planting; winter wheat planting starts this month.

Only farmers who keep within acreage-allotment limits can get price supports.

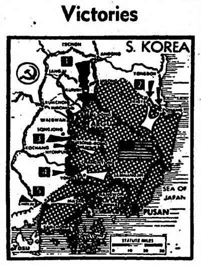
CASUALTIES

Toll Is Heavy

The shattering realities of the Korean conflict reached into many American homes as the conflict went into its third month. More than 2,600 families in the cities and small towns and on the farms of the nation have been notified of servicemen killed, wounded or missing in action.

At the same time, a military spokesman said that Korean Communists had lost 50,000 killed.

Victories



U.S. troops won victories on nearly all fronts in Korea during the eighth week of the conflict. The big Communist push (1) on Taegu from the north was driven back; South Korean troops recaptured Pohang and Kigy (2); another bridgehead (3) across the Naktong was beaten back; American forces flattened the bridgehead (4) in the Yongsan area.

HOME-FRONT:

Mobilization Bill

The senate, by a vote of 85 to 3, passed a home-front mobilization bill which would give President Truman power to invoke wage-price-rationing controls and other anti-inflation curbs at any time.

The bill then went to a senate-house conference for the ironing out of differences between the senate measure and the bill passed earlier by the house.

In one point the bill was a defeat for the administration since it directed the President to put wage and price controls into effect simultaneously and virtually across the board if he invoked them at all.

The President has maintained he sees no need of wage-price curbs or rationing at this time. Further, the administration requested authority to control commodity speculation, but neither the house or senate versions contain such authority.

Both bills contain an anti-hoarding provision prohibiting the accumulation of excessive supplies of goods designed as scarce.

The administration suffered another setback in that its plea for retention of the provision which would let the President fix controls on selected commodities—meat, for example—in advance of any general controls program, was defeated.

AMERICA:

Angry People

Americans have never liked the evasive tactics and double-talk used by diplomats. That such a dislike still persists in the minds of average Americans was indicated by the increasing number of letters to national leaders and members of the United Nations demanding that Soviet delegate Jacob Malik be thrown out of the security council.

The letters asked why prolong the arguments in the security council? Why not expel the Soviet delegate, the people in the small towns of America wanted to know?

In answer to these questions Warren Austin, U.S. chief delegate to the United Nations, made the following statement:

"Our objective is peace. We do not find peace by throwing out the person with whom we must make peace.

"We must be firm in our principles. We must be strong. But we must also be patient.

"In the United Nations, we must keep trying to convince Mr. Malik and his government of their errors and of our peaceful intentions. Through the United Nations we can reach the peoples of the Soviet Union and of other countries.

"It is not the people, it is the 'ruling circles' that we encounter here. That creates a force of public opinion, backed by moral authority that opposes aggression—and even the Soviet dictatorship cannot ignore such a force.

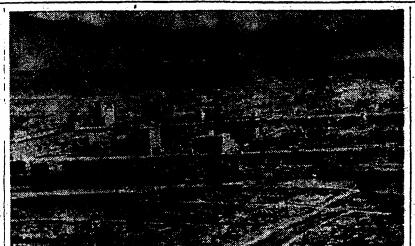
"It is a strain for us to listen to the deceit that the Russian spokesman has poured out. But truth will prevail. Meanwhile, it is better for diplomats to get nervous indigestion than for young men to get shot."

That, Americans agreed, was straight talk and to their liking.

Suspect No. 8

A stocky 33-year-old American electrical engineer, who fled to Mexico when the FBI began nabbing suspects in the Klaus Fuchs spy ring, had been arrested and charged with passing defense secrets to Russia.

Identified as Morton Sobell, he was the eighth American rounded up and charged with passing defense secrets to Russia. FBI officials said he is a radar expert.



The second atomic bomb ever exploded made a charred wilderness of the Japanese city of Hiroshima. Of the city's 340,000 population, 100,000 were killed.

△ △ △

ATOMIC ATTACK

A-Bomb Damage Would Be Big But Cities Can Survive Blast

If an atomic bomb was exploded 2,000 feet above the sidewalk of New York city today, from 100,000 to 500,000 people would die, depending upon that number within a mile and a half radius of the point of the explosion. Most Americans can not conceive the power and destruction of such an explosion against sure death if an atomic bomb was dropped in their vicinity.

There are, however, some things the public can do to help itself. Many of these things have been outlined in a book entitled "The Effects of Atomic Weapons" just published by the atomic energy commission at Washington and the United States department of defense.

The book suggests that the public can help itself on a community scale by an alarm system, by designating large shelters, by training to meet emergencies, by preparing long range, but hastened, development of highways and removal of danger points, such as slums.

Many cities, such as New York and San Francisco, have started such programs.

Three Types of Bombing

As individuals the public can protect itself by learning how to take care of injuries, by deciding in advance how to act under attack as a family or neighborhood group, by preparing simple home shelters.

Death and destruction from an atomic attack would be immense, but a city can survive as many did from terrific conventional bombing.

The terrible destruction and death rate from an atomic bomb is outlined in the book which tells what one bomb did to Hiroshima where 100,000 of the 340,000 population were killed, and what happened at Nagasaki where 70,000 of the city's 250,000 people died from one A-bomb explosion.

The book reports there are three possible types of A-bombing: High air burst as at Hiroshima and Nagasaki where the bombs were exploded about 2,000 feet above the cities, low ground, and underwater or underground.

The high air burst is the most probable in an attack on the United States. It kills the most people and does the most wide-spread damage. Its effectiveness is somewhat determined by weather and topographical conditions.

But in the average American city it would:

Kill 85 per cent of the people within a half mile radius of ground zero (the point directly below the burst), 35 per cent at one mile and 2 per cent at a mile and a half. Cause various radiation and conventional violent injuries and burns up to several miles.

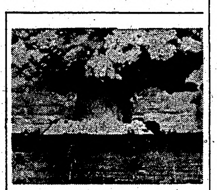
Explosion Described

Obliterate virtually all property above ground in the first zone. Do damage ranging from intense to light from the first zone to some eight miles from ground zero. Cause immense fires.

Dr. J. O. Hirschfelder of the University of Wisconsin, head of the board of editors for the book, describes an atomic explosion:

"A fraction of a second after the bomb explodes, a ball of fire shoots out to a radius of 150 yards. It gives off light of the same spectoral characteristics as the sun.

"On a clear day, the light from the ball of fire will produce skin burns up to a distance of two miles. Under some conditions, the whole area beneath the explosion may be converted into a huge fire storm or bonfire.



The above picture shows a column of water about 2,000 feet across at its base and 5,000 feet high boiling up out of Bikini lagoon in the U. S. A-bomb test.

"It takes the blast wave one second to reach one-half mile, three seconds to reach one mile, and seven seconds to reach two miles."

In these seconds there are many things a person can do to protect himself if he has the presence of mind.

The book suggests, if you are outside and that awesome glare occurs:

Don't look at the glare, drop to the ground, into a ditch or a slit trench if at all possible, or behind anything at all. Curl up to shade your face, neck, hands, arms and legs with the clothed part of your body. Stay that way at least 10 seconds. It won't keep you from radiation, but it will help against flash burns.

If you are in the street or on a road, drop prone or duck behind a tree or into a doorway if one is a step or two away. Bend over with back to light. Don't try to get to any shelter not right at hand, because most of an A-bomb's heat and radiation come in the first three seconds. Wait 10 seconds, then press tightly against a building or wall to avoid falling debris.

In the public mind, radiation is the most frightful aspect of an A-bomb attack. However, force and fire far exceed it as destroyers. In fact, exposure does not mean that you are going to die or even that there will be some permanent, peculiar after effects.

Book Is on Sale

The book says remove your clothing and scrub yourself hard with soap and water. Special methods are effective under special conditions, but soap and water are almost always around and they are pretty good universal decontaminators. Pay particular attention to skin folds, areas around body openings, fingernails and toenails and hair—and don't cause skin breaks.

The government warns any kind of a shelter in the home might save you—a reinforced wall, a corner in the basement strengthened against collapse of the ceiling, a storm cellar or cave. But be sure to provide an emergency exit if possible.

Space prohibits full discussion of the book, but it is on sale by the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D.C., for $1.25.

Radiation Changes Cell Structure

The new book discussed the effects of radiation and suggested that persons exposed to damaging radiation such as from an atomic bomb—might be wise to refrain from begetting children for several months.

Radiation can change the structure of cells of the body which carry hereditary traits. A period of two or three months might enable nature to repair the damage to the parents' cells, the book said.

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

Carey learns of Howard's plans to enter West Point and extends her congratulations. Ken, becoming increasingly aware of Carey's allure, begins to evidence signs of being jealous of Howard. Subconsciously seeking to ward off the threat of Howard as a rival, he tells Carey his brother "already has a girl." Ken invites Carey to go for a walk to Castle Rock and she accepts. Meantime, Nell chides Howard for trying to "cut out" Ken with Carey, something which he denies. Nell is afraid of Cricket, the bull, and begs Rob to dispose of the animal. Ken is upset as Carey talks of her desire for babies after she is married.

CHAPTER XII

"I see what you mean. It's just a kind of make-believe." He glanced at her questioningly, and she became serious and then nodded doubtfully. "Well, let me be in it, too. Wouldn't I do?" He laughed gaily and presently Carey laughed too, hesitatingly at first, then more hilariously as their emotion found an outlet. They roared together.

This caused more uproarious laughter, then Ken said, "I pass on both counts. Anything else?"

Carey gaily counted the points on her fingers. "He'd have to be a good physical specimen—"

Ken flexed his arm and showed his muscle. "I'm the wiry kind. I had pneumonia when I was ten, but I'm all over it."

Carey was giggling. "He'd have to be religious, but I know you are."

Ken asked, "How do you know?"

They were beginning to forget that it was a game of pretend.

"Because your family is. Your father says grace and you all go to church. But," added Carey, "I don't know if you yourself are, are you?"

"I don't know."

"Why don't you know?"

"Well, how can you tell?"

"Do you say prayers?"

"Sure," said Ken.

"Then you're religious. Why did you say you didn't know?"

"Well, I thought you meant, sort of, if I was good."

"Oh, no! I don't think it's the same thing at all. Well—so you are religious. And healthy enough, I guess—"

Carey laughed, sighed, reverted to her first theme. "Just think of naming them all! And the color of their eyes and hair—all different!"

Ken felt shut out again. These children of hers!

She straightened up, the soft wind blew her hair back from her face. Clasping her hands she looked far off into the western horizon as if she could see several of the little ones sitting on the small clouds that were gathering around the sun. "I just hope one of them will look like Penny. I think she is the most beautiful baby I ever saw."

"Well, if I am the father, maybe one of them will. She's my sister, you know."

He said this so seriously that Carey was brought up short. She gave a little embarrassed laugh. "That was just pretending, you know."

"I know," said Ken.

"Oh, Ken! Just think of giving them all their baths and putting them to bed!"

Ken gave an exclamation of annoyance. "Those children of yours! You don't think of anything else! You're just a little girl playing with dolls! I really don't think it's exactly proper!"

"It certainly is," Carey defended herself. "It is a subject that is of the greatest importance to all young people, especially girls, and one has to study and think about the things that are important."

"Let's go back," said Ken abruptly.

Carey Exults Having Two Boys Seek Favors

Carey was in the delightful state of mind that any girl is in when two handsome and attractive boys vie for her favor and there is always someone, a male someone, looking at her. She was as gay as a lark. She was always laughing, always singing, always running off with one or another or both of them. Rob and Nell tasted the joy of having a grown girl in the house.

One morning a message came from the Mexican shearers that they would arrive at the Goose Bar Ranch next day, and Rob went down to the corrals where the boys were working with their colts, and called out that one of them should ride up to Jeremy that afternoon and tell him that they would be moving down to the ranch the next morning early for the shearing.

The two boys looked at each other, then at Carey.

"Which of us?" asked Howard.

"Ken can go." Rob walked back to the house.

Ken looked at Carey. "Will you ride up with me, Carey?"

Howard said quickly, "I'm going fishing. Carey, you said you wanted to do some fishing."

Carey decided that she would prefer the fishing to the ride, and soon after the noon meal she and Howard were out digging in the flower beds for worms, while Ken saddled up.

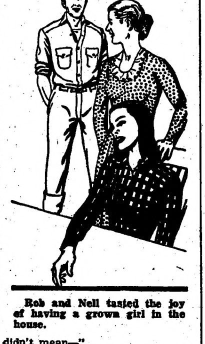
He was coming home late in the afternoon when, without intending to spy, he saw a strange scene on the big flat rock which overlooked one of the best pools on Deercreek.

From where he was riding high up along the Saddle Back he got almost a bird's-eye view of it. First there were two figures, then there was one figure, then there was some sort of a scuffle.

A flame of anger poured all through Ken. He didn't want to spy. He turned his face away, took another tack down the mountainside and rode slowly home, knowing what it was to hate his brother, to hate the hate, to feel utter misery.

He unsaddled Flicka and walked down through the Gorge, going toward the back door. Then he heard them coming up from the stream. They were behind the house and Howard was laughing as if he would burst. Ken stopped walking and stood still. In a moment or two he would be face to face with them. He was trembling.

Howard said, "But, Carey, I didn't mean—"



Rob and Nell tasted the joy of having a grown girl in the house.

Carey's voice interrupted him—it sounded as if she were half crying.

Then they turned the corner and came into Ken's view. Carey was soaking wet and covered with mud. She was in a sobbing fury. "Don't you ever speak to me again as long as you live, Howard McLaughlin!" And she rushed in the back door.

Howard turned. The boys looked at each other.

"What did you do?" demanded Ken. "You tried to kiss her!"

"I did not," denied Howard. Then, angry at himself, he gave Ken an ugly look. "What's it to you if I did? Whose business is it, I'd like to know?" And he threw up his hands into boxing position and shuffled his feet threateningly.

Boys Keep Eyes Peeled for Rob

The gesture was half in earnest, half in pretense, but it startled Ken and made him jump. He threw himself into a position of defense. Howard shuffled his feet again and began warily to circle Ken. Ken lit out, Howard countered, they began to spar.

After a moment or two Pearl came to the back door to see what was doing.

"Why, you two boys!" she exclaimed. "You ought to be ashamed of yourselves!"

The make-believe fight was becoming a real fight. To Ken particularly it was an outlet for pent-up feelings. He landed a stiff arm jolt in Howard's midriff.

Pearl danced with excitement. "Good for you, Ken! Give it to him again! Oh, cripes! My spuds are burning!" She vanished into the kitchen, but a moment later was at the back door again. "Hi-Ya! Go it!"

They did not need to be spurred on. They were fighting as hard as they could now but in deadly silence, their ears on the alert for the sound of their father's step or voice. The hot blood poured up into their faces. Their eyes blazed.

"Where's Dad?" asked Howard as he landed one on Ken's eye.

"Around on the front terrace," said Pearl in a stage whisper.

"Watch him, will you?" grunted Ken, swinging as hard as he could.

The sound of their father's voice came to them.

"Cheese it!" exclaimed Pearl. "Your father's coming!"

"What's the matter with supper, Pearl?" called Rob and his steps came loudly along the terrace toward the back of the house.

"Just goin' to ring the bell, Captain McLaughlin!" said Pearl.

The boys vanished behind the house, and a few moments later were at the supper table. So was Carey. All three had high color.

The boys' hair was plastered down in the fashion which meant a lightning session with head and comb under the water faucet. Carey's hair, too, was wet, and she said little and kept her face turned to Nell.

One of Ken's eyes was slowly closing and a purplish hue surrounded it.

Howard had a place on his lip to which he kept touching his napkin.

Rob glanced from one boy to the other but no questions were asked and all the talk was of the shearing which was to begin next day.

Big Joe and Tommy, Rob McLaughlin's heavy team, blinked their eyes as they jogged along the top of Saddle Back, going up to the sheep camp to get Jeremy's wagon and bring it to the ranch for the shearing.

They trotted side by side, festooned with harness. The braces were looped up, the big collars were loose on their necks.

Astride of Tommy was Ken. Astride of Big Joe was Carey. Big Joe's trot was long and rough. Without a saddle, and unable to post or knee-grip, she bounced madly and often had to grab the hames.

The wind was cool, the sunrise filled their eyes, they were on the top of a wide and empty world and they should have been friends but Carey's face was turned away from Ken and his heart hurt him.

It was his own fault, he knew that. He had been mad at her ever since she had chosen to go fishing with Howard the day before. It had made him still angrier that something had happened between them and that he was shut out. This ought to be threshed out and explained, she had to tell him all about it, and until she did, things could not be right between them. His manner toward her, hurting her and showing her plainly that he was affronted, was what would make her try to conciliate him; she would want to win him over, and then he would understand and forgive, and take her back into his friendship, and, oh—love her, love her—

But Carey had not played her part in this imagined scene at all. From the moment when they had kept their rendezvous, so early that it seemed practically in the night, she had been bright and sweet and oblivious to his mood and his attitude. This had made him scowl more fiercely, though, in the darkness, what use was it? She ought to be able to tell by his voice, by the short sharp sentences he spoke as he led her from the house up to the stable corral where Big Joe and Tommy were waiting.

Carey had made a few surprised, stumbling rejoinders at first, then had fallen silent, her face turned away from him. Finally she had given a little cold laugh. "Well, you don't own me, do you?"

They arrived at the wagon and before Ken had got to the side of her horse to help her she had slipped to the ground. They arrived at the ranch in time for breakfast. Already Garcia, the Mexican, and his men were there. Bunkhouse breakfast was over, the men were busy preparing the shearing pens.

Fishing Exhausts Rob's Patience

Rob heaved a deep sigh, shoved his hat farther back and scratched his head. Then, squinting, knotting the impatient lines which crisscrossed his forehead, he looked slowly over the heavens, the horizon, the far mountains.

It was his habitual, almost automatic gesture.

Rob heaved another sigh, pulled his hat down over his eyes and concentrated on his fishing. He reeled the line in, frowning heavily, cast the bait to a likely spot downstream under the farther bank, watched a moment with intense determination, impatiently yanked it out, got to his feet, walked upstream, found himself another place, and sat down to fish again. His bait was gone. Cursing freely, he got the can out of his pocket, forced a worm on the hook and dropped it under the bank.

At some distance from him, Rodney Scott, his friend and doctor, leaned around a bush, wigwagging for silence. Rodney took his fishing with appropriate seriousness. No worms for him! Few were the Saturday afternoons that did not provide him with an outing and a creel full of trout.

But Rob's short patience was exhausted. He pulled in his line and walked up to Rodney.

"How the hell a grown man can waste his time in such foolishness!" exclaimed Rob.

"How do you expect me to catch anything if you come stamping and shouting around?" complained Rodney bitterly. At that moment he felt a strike, played his fish and drew out a shining ten-inch trout.

Rob watched him glumly as he took it off the hook and dropped it in his creel. "What do you think I got you out here for?"

Rodney looked at him suspiciously, "Well, you said to come out and fish but I had an idea you had something else in the back of your head. If you want to consult me professionally why don't you come to my office when you're in town?"

JUST JESTING

She Needed the Seat

Two rather overdressed girls boarded a crowded bus, and one made a bet with the other that she could force the dignified old gentleman in the rear seat to give her his place. She pushed through the crowd and said to him:

"How do you do, Mr. Brown! Fancy meeting you on a bus! I'm so glad to see you—you're almost a stranger. My goodness, but I'm tired."

The old gentleman glanced up at the young woman he had never seen before. He rose and said in a voice audible to every passenger on the bus:

"Do sit down, then, Mary. I don't often see you out on washdays—no wonder you're tired. And, by the way, skip delivering our laundry next week. My wife is seeing the judge Monday about getting your husband a parole."

"We need men like ANCHER NELSEN"

Throughout Minnesota Republican voters and citizens generally are turning to the support of Ancher Nelsen, McLeod county farmer and for 15 years a leader for rural legislation in the State Senate, in his candidacy for Lieutenant Governor.

Born on a farm and a farmer all his life, Nelsen knows the value of hard work and understands the needs and problems of farmers. He has served on his local township and school boards, helped organize the REA in his county, been a director in his local Farmers' Elevator, and taken an active part in 4-H Club and Farm Bureau Work.

In the Legislature Ancher Nelsen's efforts in behalf of agriculture, conservation and education have been outstandingly effective. He has won the respect of business and civic groups as well as farmers.

From newspaper editors, civic leaders and just plain citizens have come fine tributes to the qualifications and ability of Ancher Nelsen. The following are typical:

"Minnesota is fortunate to have a man of the experience, capacity and progressive outlook of Senator Ancher Nelsen as a candidate," said the Mankato Free Press.

"I know him to be an able man, honest, and willing to stand up and fight for good government," wrote Senator Oscar A. Swenson.

"Minnesota and the nation need more men with the clear views and the common sense of Ancher Nelsen," said the Ceylon Herald.

Cattle Egret

The cattle egret, unlike the rest of the heron family, does not live on water creatures. It catches insects disturbed by the feet of grazing livestock. Well known to parts of Africa and South America, it was first recorded in Australia by the National Geographic Society-Smithsonian Institution Arnhem land expedition in 1948.

Squint's Drumming For Fair Play!

Squint Miller's mighty proud of the lot he owns that fronts on River Road—one of the prettiest spots around here.

He's been in a stew about it lately, though. Seems that trash-dumpers take one look at his property, stop their car or truck, and out goes a load of rubbish, spilling all over his place and the roadside, too. Wouldn't that make you mad?

Last night Squint dropped by the house. Over a friendly glass of beer, he tells me what he's done. "I put a couple of empty oil drums out there," he says, "with a big sign reading: 'If you must dump trash—use these—I like to keep my property clean!'"

From where I sit, Squint's sign should make any would-be roadside trash-dumpers pretty darned ashamed of themselves. Now and then some folks just have to be reminded that they ought to have as much regard for their neighbors' rights as they do for their own.

BEWARE

'OF POWER LINES!!

Danger of farm accidents at this time of year is generally increased due to the movement of various types of farm machinery from one place to another.

In addition to the highway hazard, there is another hazard not commonly considered. That is the danger of contact with power and telephone lines.

* * * *

There have been cases of death and severe electrical burns to operators of equipment with high road clearance when such equipment has contacted overhead power lines. Such equipment includes portable grain elevators, threshing machines, corn elevators, combines, well-drilling derricks and others. This also includes buildings being moved.

* * * *

Mr. D. R. Poole, safety director for the Otter Tail Power Company, offers this word of caution. "In any case where such equipment is to be moved from one point to another and there is any doubt that there will be sufficient clearance of power lines at any point, please contact the nearest representative of the utility operating the lines at that point.

He adds the following "Don'ts"

"Don't attempt to lift wires over the equipment.

* * * *

"Don't attempt to measure wire clearance by any means which will make contact between you and the wire. Even a wooden pole, which is ordinarily a non-conductor of electricity, may carry the current along its surface through dust or film.

* * * *

"Don't contact any pieces of machinery as it is passing under the wires while you are standing on the ground. Even though the machinery is clearing the wires, it may be very close, and a sudden bump may bring the equipment in contact with the wires. If you are riding the machinery you are relatively safe, but if contact is made with the wires and it is necessary for you to leave the machine, be sure to jump so that you are not at any time in contact with the machine and the ground at the same time.

* * * *

"Be sure that when you are moving such equipment, you retract any part of the machine that mean the margin of safety that may save your life."

* * * *

Mr. Poole also said that telephone wires that pass close to power lines are a possible source of trouble. A telephone wire which is snapped may contact the power lines thus making the telephone wire equally dangerous. In one case which he cited, such an accident set fire to a house more than a mile and a half from the point where the break occurred.

Some Undertaking

A west side politician got his first dinner coat in time for a dressy function to which he was invited. He had a little trouble tying his tie, so he dropped in at the corner saloon and asked the bar-keep which of the customers was good at tying a bow tie.

"That fellow at the end of the bar there," said the bar-keep with a laconic gesture.

The politician approached the somber-looking gentleman designated.

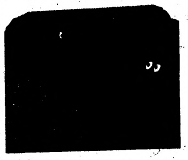
"Would you mind tying this for me?" he asked, pulling his tie out of his pocket and slipping it under his collar.

"Sure," said the man, "but not that way. You'll have to lie down."

An explanatory comment came from another bar patron.

"You see, he's an undertaker," he said.

SOCIAL SECURITY



Late on a dark night, a pedestrian was accosted by a voice from the shadows: "Would you please help a poor, hungry fellow who is out of a job; in fact, who doesn't have a thing in the world except this revolver?"

Needs The Proof

Curtis goes to a state, noted for fishing, once a year on a fishing trip. The last time he was up there the fish were biting so good that he couldn't stop when he had caught the limit.

A deputy game warden caught him with the goods and brought him into court.

"You are charged with having caught 18 more black bass than the law allows. Are you guilty or not guilty?" the judge asked.

"Well, I'm guilty," Curtis had to admit.

"Ten dollars and costs."

Curtis paid the fine and then asked the judge: "And now, Your Honor, may I have several typewritten copies of the court record made to take back and show to my friends?"

Hold That Tiger!

"When I was in India," said the club bore, "I saw a tiger come down to the water where some women were washing clothes. It was a very fierce tiger, but one woman, with great presence of mind splashed some water in its face—and it slunk away."

"Gentlemen," said a man in an armchair, "I can vouch for the truth of this story. Some minutes after this incident I was coming down to the water, I met this tiger, and, as is my habit, stroked its whiskers. Gentlemen, those whiskers were wet."

"Hurts Me More Than You"

A mother in Berkeley, California, had five stitches in her spanking hand because her three-year-old son put a pair of scissors in his back pocket for protection.

SAME AGE

Grandpappy's right leg was hurting quite a bit and the doctor said, "Old age." Enraged, Grandpappy shot back at the doctor, "My left leg is just as old, and it don't hurt a danged bit."

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

MacArthur Note Spotlights Breach On High Military-Civilian Levels; British Soldiers Arriving in Korea

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

MACARTHUR:

Truman Applies Gag

The now famous note of Gen. Douglas MacArthur to the Veterans of Foreign Wars, which President Truman personally ordered withdrawn, gave the people of the U.S. the almost unparalleled spectacle of a President telling an American general to mind his own business and leave foreign policy to the White House.

In his note General MacArthur declared Formosa is vital to America's far east defenses and must remain in non-Communist hands. He went so far as to say that many did not understand "the pattern of oriental psychology to respect and follow aggressive, resolute, and dynamic leadership."

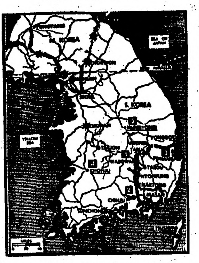
To pursue any other course than holding our Pacific positions would expose our friends in the orient "to the lustful thrusts of those who stand for slavery against liberty, for atheism as against God." The general's idea is that Formosa should be included in our Pacific positions.

In personally ordering the note withdrawn, the President set forth the official American policy—the United States has no designs on Formosa, we are guarding it to keep the war from spreading, and its future as a former Japanese territory is a subject for international settlement.

Republicans, however, quickly made political meat of the note and put it into the congressional record. Observers also were of the opinion Communist nations would use it as propaganda expounding U.S. 'imperialistic' designs upon Asia.

It is an unfortunate 'breach between the military and high civilian levels. Nothing like it has been spotlighted on the American scene since Lincoln's troubles with his generals and cabinet members.

Air Strikes



As North Korean troops regrouped along the comparatively quiet Wegwam-Tabu-Uisong (1) front, B-29 bombers and fighters continued strikes against rail marshalling yards, bridges and supply depots (bomb burst symbols). Communist attacks west of Mason (2) were countered and the South Koreans met a new drive on the east coast (3). Two main enemy headquarters are at Chonju (4) and Mungyong (5).

POLITICS:

What's The Issue?

An unusual, almost unique, situation has developed on the American political scene. In the midst of war, with the highest number of employed in several years, with prosperity at a new peak, congress must adjourn soon so many of its members can campaign for reelection. But the question is: What will be the issues?

Four months ago there were a number of issues. Among them were such questions as reduced spending, slashing or increasing armed forces, and communism with the government. Many of those campaign issues have been cast aside and others must be found to take their place. Criticism of the conduct of the war seems the most likely.

The senators and representatives are faced with another question. Should they go home to campaign now, or wait until the international picture has cleared and the Korean war has reached a definite phase? They will be criticized whatever they do.

The political picture is further confused for a smashing pre-election victory in Korea could give the Democrats immediate needed support and would knock the Republicans' campaign of criticism of the war's conduct into the ash can.

It is one of the most unusual situations ever to face a congress.

CASUALTIES:

Climb to 100,000

The Korean war is now in its third month. In this time the war has taken a toll of more than 100,000 killed, wounded or missing on both sides.

It is a rough estimate, observers reported, with nothing official from North Korean sources, and United States losses are not up to date.

The estimate was broken down as follows:

North Korean losses — frontline, 50,000; killed and wounded by strafing and bombing front, 20,000; losses among guerrillas and in sea actions, 10,000; civilians killed or wounded by long-range bombing attacks as announced by North Korean radio at Pyongyang, 11,582.

UN losses — American casualties (unofficials and estimated by several sources which were not named), more than 500; South Korean battle losses, more than 20,000; South Korean civilians, but no possible estimate.

SOCIAL SECURITY:

10 Million Benefit

President Truman signed into law a vast expansion of social security which brings 10 million more workers under the law and, in some instances, increases benefits as much as 100 per cent.

The new law was not as far reaching as the President had campaigned for, but he called it "an outstanding achievement" nevertheless. The law will become active beginning October 1.

KOREA:

British Troops Arrive

Crack British troops—1,500 strong landed in Korea as U. N. forces continued to battle an increased Communist offensive from the north in the area of Pohang.

The British reinforcements were from Hong Kong and had been in training for mountain fighting for 16 months. They will operate under the command of Lt. Gen. Walton H. Walker, commander of U.N. ground forces in Korea.

Meanwhile, bitter fighting on the east coast continued, in what military observers reported as a move by the invaders to cut in behind the vital communication center of Taegu. Frontal assaults on U.N. positions in that area repeatedly failed in recent weeks.

The Reds were reported using 40,000 troops along the jagged northern front, slipping strong patrols through the mountains to within 18 miles of Taegu.

In the air, United States planes continued to pound Red supply and manufacturing centers and give close support to ground forces.

The U.S. air force had flown 20,500 sorties since the beginning of the war and was credited with severely crippling the enemy. Confirmed destruction of 111 Red tanks was among the results listed, with no evaluated estimates on the number knocked out in more than 600 attacks on tanks, armored cars and half-tractor vehicles.

SOVIETS:

A New Trend

A new trend of thought has effused from the Korean war. It is based on the assumption that the struggle now has entered the critical stage and the battle lines are fairly well stabilized, and, that the men in the Kremlin now must know beyond question that North Korean forces are doomed to defeat.

The new thought is simply this: The Communists have decided what their next major move is to be and are getting set to make it.

Western diplomats believe the Soviets and their satellites have three courses open to them at this point.

First, they may occupy North Korea in an effort to prevent the U. S. - U. N. forces from crossing the 38th parallel and moving in close to Manchuria and the Russian port of Vladivostok.

Second, being confronted with the prospect of a North Korean defeat, they may make an effort to settle the fighting in some manner acceptable both to Russia and the west.

Third, they may send armed forces into the fight on the side of the North Koreans in open defiance of the U.N.

Many United States officials believe the first of the three courses is the most likely one to be employed by the Soviets. These officials believe that Russia is still anxious to avoid moves which might lead to a general war.

Employment

As the Korean war entered its tenth week the United States was experiencing a steadily tightening labor market. Unemployment was relatively low and more than 61 million persons had jobs.

In some instances there were reports of labor "pirating" and other industries, especially aircraft, sent out scouts for skilled technicians. The situation was not likely to improve.

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES

As we get older, stress and strain, overexertion, excessive smoking or exposure to cold sometimes slows down kidney function. This may lead many folks to complain of nagging backache, loss of pep and energy, headaches and dizziness. Getting up nights or frequent passages may result from minor bladder irritations due to cold, dampness or dietary indiscretions.

If your discomforts are due to these causes, don't wait, try Doan's Pills, a mild diuretic. Used successfully by millions for over 50 years. GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

Ken's animosity toward Howard begins to build up when, in a discussion with Carey, he learns that she feels she has known Howard longer, because she "met him first." Ken's anger flames when he sees Carey and Howard scuffling on a rock near the stream where they had gone fishing. Ken is too far away to see what happened, but he surmises Howard tried to kiss Carey. At any rate, he accuses Howard of the attempt, only to have Howard to deny it. However, Howard demands what business it would have been of Ken's if the accusation were true. The boys get into a real fist-fight, but it breaks up as Rob appears.

CHAPTER XIII

Rob shrugged. "Go on and get your fish. I'll put in the time doing something that'll be of some use to me. Call me when you're through." He walked a little way off, flung himself down on the grass, pulled his hat over his eyes and composed himself for slumber.

"Who is sick?" asked Rodney as he gathered up his things and moved upstream a little way.

There was no answer. A gentle snore came from under Rob's hat. Rodney smiled and carefully cast under the farther bank, then relaxed in the true fisherman's attitude, a blend of a constant alert and a dreaming peace.

Fishing, one can think of many things at once. Thoughts dart through the mind, different topics, as fish through the water. Who was sick here at the Goose Bar? The baby? Nell had had Penny in his office regularly. The baby was thriving. Howard? Ken? Nothing was ever wrong with Rob or Nell.

Who was sick here anyway? Nell. The conviction hit him hard. She had been sick a long time. Why hadn't he seen it? He had carried her through her pregnancy and confinement with standard care, standard remedies, standard advice.

Nothing had gone wrong. They had been crazy for the baby, overanxious. When she came she was tiny. All attention had been centered on her. But certainly, now, looking back, he could see that Nell was not herself—had not been herself since the baby came. Before that? His thoughts went probing back into the past. Certainly Nell had been terribly run down that year before her pregnancy began—white and thin and silent. Before that? He couldn't remember. Nell was a hard person to know about. So very controlled. Always the same in her gay manner, in the way she was adequate to every demand, and if anything was wrong, covered up.

Zing! Another strike. As Rodney played the fish a deep, bellowing roar reached him. Rodney looked about nervously. In these big pastures, a mile or more square, you never knew if there were cattle in it with you or not, but the bulls knew, instantly, if there was a stranger on the place. That bull was a terror.

Then Rodney saw Cricket, who had already seen him. The bull was a quarter-mile away and, fortunately, on the other side of a fence. Cricket was pacing the length of it, his head turned so that he could keep his eyes on this stranger. Now and then he paused to rake the dust and roar.

From the other direction came Rob's lusty snores. Rodney felt reassured and continued to fish until his creel was full. Then he reeled in his line, put away his folder of flies and went to Rob and sat down beside him. He shook him by the shoulder.

"Now tell me who is sick?" he asked.

Rob sat up, stretched, shook the sleep out of his eyes, addressed Rodney with jovial profanity, examined the heavens, took his pipe out and filled it, demanded to see Rodney's fish and finally settled down to talk about Nell.

Rob Tells of Nell's Condition to Doctor

And Rob talked and talked, pausing occasionally to answer questions, and the burden of it all was just that Nell was not right—hadn't been right for several years—was getting worse—others were beginning to notice it—the boys—something wrong with her—just the other night woke up screaming and wanted Rob to "Hold me! Hold me!" God! It gave him the shivers. Rodney was silent a long time. He had a stalk of timothy grass in his mouth. He pulled at it and chewed it, his eyes far away.

"And you say she's never been ill?"

"Never a sick day in her life," said Rob proudly.

"Never," said Rodney slowly, "until now."

"Yes. Now when everything is going so well. Furnace in, a cook for her, plenty of help, no worries!" and Rob finished with a helpless, bewildered gesture.

"Perhaps that's just the trouble," suggested Rodney.

Rob turned to look at him questioningly. "How?"

"Perhaps she's one of those women who never gives up as long as the going is tough. When everything is easy for them, they go all to pieces."

Rob screwed up his face and shoved his hat back to scratch his head.

Rob rubbed his chin reflectively. "Nell hasn't had a breakdown—I wouldn't go so far as to say that."

"She might be better now if she had had one," said Rodney. "If she had let herself go to pieces—get a nurse — give up everything — be really sick, perhaps go to the hospital and then get over it."

Rob shook his head. "Nell just couldn't," he said simply.

"Then," said Rodney, "we know what's the matter with her. We've diagnosed the case."

Rob was silent a few moments digesting this. "That amounts to saying that it is mental," he said.

"The glands are all tied up in whatever is mental and emotional. And when they get out of balance, then there are physical results. I could kick myself," he added. "I should have studied her more closely and given her some tests. But I never noticed."

The bull was a quarter-mile away and, fortunately on the other side of the fence.

"That's just it," said Rob, "one doesn't notice anything wrong with her. That is, one didn't. But now I think even the boys notice it."

"How?" asked Rodney.

"Oh, it's not like Nell to go pewling and mewling around. About her food, for instance, she's so picky about it. She never used to complain if I happened to bring out something from Cheyenne that isn't just exactly what she put on the list for me to get."

Rodney chuckled. "Gives you back talk, does she? Good for Nell!"

"Back talk!" Rob was aggrieved. "She says that I ought to stop using my own judgment and obey orders for a change."

Rodney laughed outright.

"You can laugh," said Rob doggedly, "but it isn't like Nell."

They sat a moment in silence, then Rob added, "There's one thing—perhaps I should tell you—that a year before Penny was born Nell and I were at outs with each other. In fact we almost came to the point of separating. Did you know that?"

"Never dreamed of it," said Rodney, chewing his piece of grass. "How did that affect Nell?"

"Well, she really went down then. Anyone could see it. She didn't eat. Got thin as a rail. Didn't sleep either. It went on a long time."

"Of course a thing like that plays hob with the whole system," said Rodney. "Then you made it up?"

"Yes."

"And what happened to Nell? That's when she should have had her breakdown — leave you for a while—get a rest somewhere, hospital maybe."

"Well—" said Rob hesitantly, "we had been so keen to have a little girl—another baby—and that's when Penny started."

"She went right into a pregnancy," said Rodney thoughtfully, "and she didn't have an easy time either when Penny was born."

"I know."

"And now since the baby came she hasn't had her out of her sight—how old is Penny?"

"Twenty months."

"Nor been off this ranch."

"No."

Rodney acted as if the case were closed. He removed the grass from his mouth, took his hat off, passed his handkerchief over his thinning hair, then opened his creel and began to count his trout.

Howard and Nell Talk Old Times

Nell had spent the afternoon at her piano. This wonderful piano! At the thought of it she felt a warm rush of happiness and gratitude toward Rob. How good he was to her! How constantly he thought of her and did things for her! One of his great pleasures, since his finances had improved, was giving her presents. The beautiful new silver set on her dressing-table. The little bedroom clock with its soft chimes. The clothes he insisted on her having — why, he never even passed her, if he was eating something good, without offering her a bite!

Howard came in, pulled up a big chair to face his mother and sat down to listen.

She glanced at him, smiling, went on playing.

He laid his head back, slung one long thin leg over the arm of the chair. He had obviously been doing something violent, looked tired and hot, his neckerchief twisted under one ear, black hair plastered to his head.

Nell wondered what he would say, what was in his mind. Would it be about Carey? or Barbara? Perhaps he was about to tell her.

"Only eight days more," he finally said.

That was it. He was counting the days before he left home.

"Mother, isn't it the darndest thing the way I always have to leave just when something is happening? Two summers ago, remember? I missed out on seeing Thunderhead in the race at Saginaw Falls. And the year before that, right after I left, Ken went up to the Valley of the Eagles and got tangled up with the eagle and had all those adventures. And now this year I have to leave just before we go out to find Thunderhead and Jewel. Damn the luck!"

Nell's eyes were upon him, smiling, while her fingers continued to play.

"West Point is a pretty big adventure, it seems to me."

Looking directly into her eyes, taking her along with him, as it were, into his future, the trip on the train, up the Hudson to West Point, feeling her excitement, her sympathy, he was comforted.

He relaxed in his chair. "Play the 'Polonaise'," he said. "It always makes me feel like doing things—big things."

Nell played it. When she had finished it, he said, "Mother, do you remember when I went away to school the first time, you gave me a talk? Kind of a lecture?"

"Did I, son?"

"Well—I did it."

"Did the things you told me to. Two things."

"What were they?"

"You told me to pray. And to be honest."

Nell bent her head over the piano and began to play again to conceal the feeling that surged up in her. Mothers talk so much, advise so much, are all the time correcting and pointing out and lecturing, but if out of all that flood of talk a few things can be remembered and acted upon, a few such things as that—to be honest, to pray.

He straightened himself up, stuffed into his belt the tail of his shirt which had come out, and said, "All right. Don't forget. I'm going for a swim before supper."

Meaningless Fear Sweeps Over Nell

Nell went out to the terrace. Penny was there in her pen and she did not like her pen. But the pen was a necessity for, though she was small for her age, she was swift as quicksilver. She ran with little twinkling feet that reminded Nell of the sandpipers on the Cape Cod beaches. She was here, there, and everywhere, so quickly it was impossible to keep track of her.

When she saw Nell she plucked out the thumb and held out her arms with a torrent of the soft and liquid bird notes which were her special language. Nell picked her up and took her in and sat her on top of the grand piano and coaxed her to sing. Nell would sing a note, Penny would open her mouth with an excited, delighted expression on her face and emit an "Oh!" an octave higher. Nell sang a song. Penny sang along with her, not the right notes, but an ecstatic warbling.

She suddenly stopped singing, turned her head and listened. Nell did likewise. There came to them the deep sounds of the bull roaring.

Penny looked questioningly at her mother. "No more?" she suggested. Nell did not know whether she wanted no more singing or no more bull roaring.

"Come, honeybunch, let's go for a walk," said Nell. She lifted the baby off the piano and set her on the floor. Penny trotted to the door and pushed at the screen. Nell took her by the hand and they went down to the Green.

Kim, the yellow collie, came slowly across the Green, his ears flat because of the love he was feeling at sight of Nell there and the baby sitting on the grass. He looked, smiling, from one to the other, and then went to Penny, standing with his pointed nose close to her face and his brush of a tail waving gently.

WHAT BRINGS IN THE FARM DOLLARS

Minneapolis—Minnesota's billion two hundred million farm income in 1949 averaged about $6,000 gross cash revenue per farm; 70 per cent of this was from cattle, hogs, dairy products, poultry and eggs, 30 per cent from crops; hogs was the biggest livestock item at 20c in each dollar, corn the biggest crop item at 9c in each dollar. Half of North Dakota's $7,600 income per farm is from wheat, half of South Dakota's $8,000 per farm is from cattle and hogs; Montana's $9,800 cash income per farm is half from livestock, half from crops.

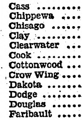
Why your school taxes haven't gone even higher

AN ISSUE OF INTEREST to every Minnesota taxpayer was recently discussed by the Stillwater Post Messenger. Wrote its editor, Alvin Serkland: "We need to face the fact that in the development of taconite (or inferior grade) iron ore deposits, this state has its greatest future in iron mining. We need to slant our regulation and taxing on that basis. This is true because we do need the iron ore industry in the state. Its passing would leave a hole in our economy . . . ."



Serkland

NO DOUBT YOU'D AGREE that Minnesota needs its iron ore industry. But have you any idea what this industry really means to you as a taxpayer? Do you know, for instance, how it helps keep your own school taxes from soaring still higher?

Over the years, iron ore has helped mightily to build up two trust funds which today provide important financial support every year to the primary and secondary schools of every single Minnesota county. Indeed, over 3 out of every 4 dollars of the permanent school and swamp land trust funds came from iron ore taxes and royalties on iron ore.

Total Distribution $3,674,076.99

To date the iron ore industry has contributed $113 million to these permanent trust funds. But that's only a small fraction of the TOTAL tax revenue Minnesota has gotten from iron ore. All told, Minnesota's iron ore industry has paid nearly three quarters of a billon dollars in taxes to state and local governments.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.

1950 Unusual Crop Year

The crop year of 1950 in the Red River Valley will be long remembered according to O. C. Soine, agronomist at the Northwest School of Agriculture at Crookston for its spring floods, its late planting season, its cool summer, paradoxical crop yields and its escape from late August killing frost. Only spotted injury from frost occured in the valley in contrast to the killing frost which struck aeas south in Minnesota and adjoining states. Mr. Soine pointed out that the mean temperature for August was 63.05 degrees as compared to a long-time average of 67.31.

No Deer Hunt Season in 1950

A state-wide closed season for deer this year was announced today by Chester S. Wilson, Commissioner of Conservation, on recommendation of Frank D. Blair, Director of Game and Fish after reviewing the reports of deer conditions throughout the state at a meeting of Game and Fish Division officials and biologists.

In some areas there are plenty of deer to stand hunting. However, the present distribution of the herds is very irregular, in large sections, especially in the northeast of the state, severe conditions last winter and spring took a heavy toll of yearling fawns, as well as new fawns born early in the spring. This resulted in a considerable loss of future breeding stock in those areas. Because of the irregular shape and size of depleted areas, it is impossible to work out an effective zoning plan for closing them while opening other areas where deer are more plentiful. Therefore, we have decided to close the whole state to build up the breeding stock for the future

Cases of deer damage in the farming regions will be handled by special control measures as far as necessary, with the cooperation of local farmers and sportsmen's clubs.

Mrs. Hilmer Moberg has spent the past three weeks at the bedside of her aged mother Mrs E. B. Simmons at Karlstad. She passed away Monday and several relatives from here attended the funeral which was held on Thursday.

October Worst Accident Month

Autumn, which by the calendar starts Sept. 23, is the most dangerous season of the year, the Minnesota Highway Department cautions motorists. October according, to the Department's accident records, has the highest average of traffic deaths, and September is usually second.

Principal causes are early darkness and failure of motorists to adjust their driving habits to seasonal conditions. The Department offers these rules as an aid to safe night driving:

1. Slow down at sundown. Slow down when visibility is poor and when road surfaces are slippery. Control speed so you can always stop safely in the space clearly illuminated by your headlights.
2. Keep windshield and lamps clean. Keep headlights properly aimed.
3. Correct faulty eyesight. Consult physician or oculist.
4. Obey traffic signals, Stop signs, speed, and warning signs.
5. Keep alert for pedestrians, unlighted or dimly lighted vehicles, foreign objects in the roadway, animals and farm implements.
6. Keep your car in good mechanical condition, especially lights, brakes, tires and steering gear.
7. If possible keep a window open for better hearing and ventilation,
8. Keep a clear head. Don't drive after drinking. Don't drive when very tired. Get plenty of sleep before starting on a long trip. Stop and rest frequently.
9. Use proper headlight beam, upper beam on rural roads when there are no vehicles within 1,000 feet, lower beam when approaching other vehicles and when driving on well lighted highways or city streets.
10. Do not stop on highway at night. If necessary to stop, pull off on the shoulder. If emergency makes this impossible, keep parking lights and inside dome lights on. Use flares or reflectors if possible. See that taillight is not obscured.

N. Y. Turkeys

New York growers will raise about 865,000 turkeys in 1950, an increase of 10 per cent over 1949.

Lemon-Ade

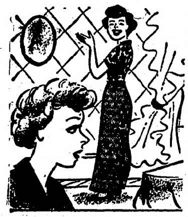
George Ade had finished his after-dinner speech at a gathering of notables, and when he had seated himself a well-known lawyer who was also an amateur wit, rose, shoved his hands deep into his trousers' pockets, as was his habit and laughingly inquired of those present:

"Doesn't it strike the company as a little unusual that a professional humorist should be funny?"

When the laugh had subsided, Ade drawled out:

"Doesn't it strike the company as a little unusual that a lawyer should have his hands in his own pockets?"

QUITE A SWITCH



"What do you think of this new slacks vogue?"

"It proves that there is nothing new under the sun. Just about the time the Chinese women are changing from trousers to skirts, ours are changing from skirts to trousers."

Cut That Out

It was the first wedding ceremony for the young minister and he was almost as bashful and embarrassed as the young couple before him. In a brave effort to round out the affair, the minister stammered:

"It's all over now. Go and sin no more!"

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Truman Gives 8 Points for Peace; Reds Snap Defense Wall in North; New Wage Increases Are Reported

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

TRUMAN:

Statement of Policy

In an obvious attempt to erase some of the confusion that has developed around the American foreign policy since General MacArthur's statement on Formosa, President Truman made a report to the nation in which he stated eight aims of this country.

At the same time he announced plans for doubling American armed strength to nearly 3,000,000 men and asserted our productive capacity would be pushed to any degree necessary to attain a victory for freedom and the rule of law.

In his speech which was broadcast over a world-wide hookup, the President made it plain that a world war would not develop unless the Communists drove new puppets against the United Nations forces in Korea.

By this he meant, of course, Chinese Communists who have been reported as massing troops near the Korean border.

However, he made it plain that we would stay in the conflict if such a decision was made. He then attacked Russia for violating its pledges of international co-operation and preaching peace, but practicing aggression.

The eight points expounded in his speech:

1. We believe in the United Nations.
2. We believe Koreans have a right to be free.
3. We don't want the Korean fighting to expand into general war.
4. We particularly hope the Chinese people won't be misled into fighting the U.N. and the American people who still are their friends.
5. We want none of Asia, Formosa included, for ourselves.
6. We believe in freedom for all far eastern nations.
7. We do not believe in aggressive or preventive war.
8. We want peace and "we shall achieve it."

KOREA:

Stab at Taegu

North Korean forces, in the greatest advance in several weeks, broke through the northern U.N. defense wall and sent two columns of tanks and troops within a few miles of Kyangju, 12 miles south of Pohang.

From there the columns could swing west and stab at Taegu from the rear, or continue to push for Pusan some 50 miles to the south. It was the most serious threat to U.N. forces in a number of weeks. Military men were wondering if the Communists had the strength to exploit their penetration.

On all other fronts U.N. forces were holding or counter-attacking. In the northwest U.S. troops continued to root out Reds dug in on a 3,000-foot ridge 12 miles north of Taegu and smashed several Red attempts to cross the Naktong river.

On the south-central front U.N. forces further compressed the Red bridgehead across the Naktong near where it joins the Nam river.

In the southwest U. N. forces were back in old positions west of Maman and Mason after breaking up new red attacks. On this front the Communists reportedly lost 13,000 troops in four days.

In the air navy and air force planes continued to give close support to ground forces on all fronts, striking savagely with heavy explosives, rockets, napalm fire bombs and machine guns.

B-29's and B-26's continued to strike deep into Red territory.

LEWIS:

The Bear Growls

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, and known in some quarters as the unhappy bear in labor's ranks, has growled again. This time the victim was AFL President William Green.

Lewis told Green in no uncertain terms that his union would not be bound by a no-strike pledge during the war emergency.

He charged Green of bartering the rights of labor to appease his "innate craving for orthodox respectability" and added: "Restrict your pledges to your own outfit. We can do our own no-striking."

Some believed Lewis used this means of getting back at Green for not including the miners in unity talks between the AFL and the CIO.

EMPLOYMENT:

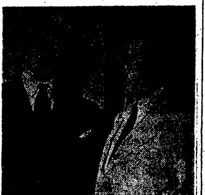
All-Time High

Employment in the United States was the greatest in the nation's history, the department of commerce reported with more than 62 million persons at work.

The only decrease noted in the entire employment picture was that of farm workers. A drop of 280,000 during the month, to 8,160,000, was reported.

The August total was 752,000 above the record set in July, 1948.

Conference



Chairman Millard Tydings (left), senate armed services committee, and house armed services Committee Chairman Carl Vinson, (right), are shown at the White House after conferring with President Truman on a new tank program which will cost an additional $500,000,000.

LABOR:

What's in the Future?

The Ford motor company tore up an unexpired contract with the United Automobile Workers and granted an immediate 8-cent-hourly cost-of-living wage increase. Previously, the Chrysler corporation had made a "voluntary" wage adjustment of 10 cents an hour. On top of this the White House announced the long dispute between the A.F.L. switchman's union and 10 western railroads had been settled with an agreement that gives the union a 23-cent-hourly wage boost.

With these facts in mind, economists are asking what's in the future for the American people? They came up with the immediate answer that it will force the nation into direct wage and price controls much sooner than would otherwise have occurred.

The Ford company's labor relations is always a pattern for the automobile industry. Other companies will follow this trend, most observers agreed.

Current hourly pay of the average automobile worker is estimated at $1.75. Rates for skilled craftsmen, such as tool and die makers, run about $2.50.

Most economists believed the new wage increases would be reflected in the price of automobiles within the near future.

Observers reported the over-all picture indicated a round of wage increases throughout the labor ranks. These increases in the past have been reflected in the cost of living in all fields.

Some economists, however, believe that as soon as the wage structure is equalized to make up for loss of purchasing power since Korea, the economy will go along on a plateau.

JOHNSON:

Refuses to Resign

Defense Secretary Louis Johnson, under fire from many quarters to resign but still backed by President Truman, flatly rejected a demand for his resignation and said he had "no apology" for his record as chief of the nation's military forces.

In his unusual statement Johnson said many of the attacks on both him and Acheson were "primarily political" and were leveled "with an eye to the November election."

He likened himself to the late Defense Secretary Forrestal who broke down after repeated attacks by critics and later jumped to his death.

He said he was sure he still enjoyed the confidence of the President and the public and that "in the long run the solid facts of what the department of defense is accomplishing will stand out above the misinformation that various individuals and various groups, for reasons of their own, see fit to spread."

Among other things, Johnson has been accused of promoting a defensive war and working against the policies of the state department. Criticism of Johnson has been forthcoming from both Democrats and Republicans.

Casualties

A total of 6,886 Korean war casualties were reported by the defense department as the conflict got well into its third month. The total, however, did not include those suffered during the latest big Communist push.

The total included 443 killed in action, 3889 wounded, and 2,436 missing in action. The summary said 60 wounded have been returned to duty.

MANPOWER:

Doctors and Fathers

Thousands of men who had looked upon the draft as something remote, a mere possibility in the dim future, suddenly found themselves face to face with the probability of being in the armed forces.

The house armed services committee announced the draft would be extended to draft-age married men with dependents. Officials estimated there are 1,000,000 married nonveterans of draft age—19 through 25—and that up to 400,000 would qualify for induction.

Meanwhile, a senate house group reached a compromise on a bill to draft doctors and dentists through age 50. The bill upon which the conferees agreed is designed to put into uniform 5,600 doctors and 3,000 dentists who were trained at government expense during World War II.

Few doctors or dentists actually are expected to be drafted. Military officials are confident the threat of a draft will swell the ranks of volunteers. An added inducement is the fact that volunteers will get $100-a-month bonus while draftees will not. Doctors could be drafted with the rank of private; volunteers, would get at least a lieutenant's commission.

Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, director of national selective service, reported that nearly three out of five candidates for military service are being rejected.

SPY-WEARY HOUSE:

Votes Red Curbs

The house had approved by a roll-call vote of 354 to 20 a bill which subjects American Communists to heavy curbs, and the senate was expected to approve a similar bill.

The measure is unusual on the American scene in that it would force a political party to register its many fronts (organizations). It goes even further and would compel them to label their propaganda and deny them defense jobs, bar them from government employment, and deny them the right to travel abroad.

President Truman is reported to disapprove of the legislation on the grounds that it might impair traditional American liberties. From a technical viewpoint such legislation if applied to one party could be applied to another and thus restricts the individual's political and civil liberties.

According to the FBI, the legislation will hit about 550,000 Communists and fellow travelers. J. Edgar Hoover, director of the FBI, in a recent report estimated there are about 50,000 Communists and 10 times that many sympathizers in the United States.

DEWEY:

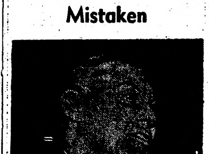
All-Out Attack

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, who was as dead as a fried mackerel — politically speaking — after his recent announcement that he was retiring, is back in the limelight. Dewey announced he would seek a third term as governor of New York.

His return to the ring would indicate the Republicans have found an issue. In his own words: "We will not survive this crisis (the Korean conflict) unless we have a strong and constructive opposition party to force correction of the errors and incompetence of the national administration and to compel it to take a larger view of our dangers and more effective action to meet them."

Political observers reported there can be no doubt now as to what campaign issues the Republicans will expound this fall. On all fronts it will be a sharp attack on President Truman's conduct of the Korean war.

Mistaken



Ex-New Dealer Lee Pressman, (above) admitted onetime Communist, in testimony before a house committee named three other government employees who were Communists in 1934 and 1935. Now Pressman says he feels he made a "mistake" by joining the Communist party and that he has cut all connections with them.

FORMOSA:

Confusion Increases

New confusion has been added to the Formosa question with President Truman's statement that it would no longer be necessary to keep the U.S. seventh fleet off Formosa once peace has been settled in the Korean war.

No one seems sure just what President Truman means. On the surface the statement would seem premature and adds to existing confusion.

Middle of the Road Is Place to Marry

VIENNA, ILL.—For happiness, try a "middle of the road" marriage.

This is the advice of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Carlton.

Learning that funeral services were being held in the church where their marriage was scheduled 50 years ago, the couple waited for the minister to come outside.

He married them in a horse-drawn buggy in the middle of the road. Some 100 persons who attended the funeral stayed for the marriage ceremony.

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

Rob McLaughlin, becomes worried about his wife's strange mental condition and attitude toward things in general, inveigles his friend and physician, Dr. Rodney Scott into a fishing trip. As the men fish, Rob details the things about which he is apprehensive and confesses that once he and his wife, Nell, were on the verge of separation. By judicious questioning, Dr. Scott elicits the information that Nell has never been away from the ranch, with the questioning indicating that what she needs is a long rest, although the doctor makes no diagnosis. The ranch is electrified by the news that Buck Daly has located Thunderhead.

CHAPTER XIV

Cricket's roars were getting closer. He was being brought to the barn with the cows for evening milking and feeding.

A wave of fear went over Nell. It was not the bull. It was the meaningless fear she had had this last year, always accompanied by a feeling of helplessness to avert whatever fate was impending. It was as if suddenly she were going to be run over . . . a locomotive was bearing down upon her . . . or a crowd of men with uplifted axes were hurling themselves upon her . . . or she was drowning . . . or someone had her by the throat . . . or she was going over a cliff in an automobile.

She put her hand to her throat. There was that terrible feeling of constriction. Could there be the slightest reason for this or was it pure hysteria? Was it true, as she thought, that she really had not long to live? Howard—this little talk he asked for—was it farewell? Would she ever see him again? Two years—

The conviction came to her that she would not live that long. She was not getting better, she was getting worse.

She stood up and walked nervously down toward the cowbarn. She saw the cows coming around the shoulder of the hill in the calf pasture. Tim was driving them. She noticed the pitchfork in his hand.

She was standing there, watching the bull, when Rob and Rodney Scott returned from the window. Milking was over and the cows were in the corral. The gate stood open to the calf-pasture. A few of them were moving out. Cricket was quiet.

"I want Rob to sell that bull or have him killed, Rodney," said Nell as they approached her. "Don't you think he should?"

"I should say not!" exclaimed Rob. "We raised him from a calf, and now he's proved. His first calves are milking and giving higher butterfat than any of our other cows. Sell him? Don't be silly."

"I really mean it," said Nell. "Rodney, you know the awful things that happen. You're always reading in the paper about thoroughbred dairy bulls goring their owners. You hear the tales on every farm. If a bull turns bad-tempered, as Cricket has, sell him! And sell him the day before something happens—not the day after!" And suddenly her voice was shaking.

Thunderhead Located, Buck's Wire Announces

"Listen, honey, Rodney and I've been talking about you. You're a nervous woman. That's why you worry about the bull, and everything. We want you to go to the hospital and take a long rest."

Nell looked at him as if he were crazy. Then at Rodney.

Rodney seemed embarrassed, but presently he nodded and said, "How would you like that, Nell?"

"I wouldn't like it at all," said Nell with a short laugh. "I think it's the silliest thing I ever heard of. Go on up to the back door and get the fish smell off yourselves, then come to the terrace and I'll have something cool for you to drink."

Howard came round the corner of the house. He had been swimming. His hair was wet, his towel was over his arm. At that moment the telephone rang. Howard said, "I'll answer it!" and ran indoors.

Presently he came out holding a sheet of paper upon which he had written down the message.

"It's from Buck, Dad! A telegram from Westgate, Colorado! They telephoned it from the station! He's found the horses!"

Rob set Penny on the terrace and held out his hand. "Let's see," and took the paper Howard held out. Have located Thunderhead and seventeen head of horses west of here. Will wait here till you come.
Buck.

After dinner they got the maps out and studied them. Westgate was on the North Platte near the headwaters.

Rob glanced at Ken. "Want to come, Ken?"

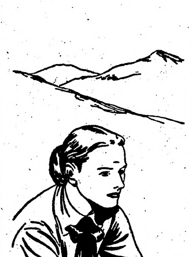
Ken was silent. His face paled. During the five days of the shearing he and Carey had not really got together, whereas Carey and Howard had. If she had been angry at Howard for whatever it was he had done, in the intimacy of being amongst the sheep, watching the work of the shearers and helping Jeremy move the sheep from one pen into the other, she had forgiven him and forgotten it. They were thicker than ever. They seemed to have something new to laugh about. And Ken was completely in the dark. If he went along in the station wagon it was certain Howard would have the inside track with Carey and he would be the gooseberry. A whole long day of that!

He said he didn't want to go along.

"Suit yourself," said Rob, and gathered up the maps.

It had been a hectic morning. Pearl had not appeared to make the breakfast. When Nell went looking for her she found her still in bed, groaning with the misery of a hangover. There had been a party the day before, following Penny's baptism and everyone on the ranch had partaken of champagne. But Pearl had also had a visitor, and the visitor had brought a bottle, and Pearl had made an occasion of it. Nell made the breakfast next morning.

Then the station wagon had left with Rob and Howard and Carey.



Nell watched Cricket eating his oats.

Ken had disappeared somewhere on horseback in a very bad temper. Kim and Chaps had gone with him. The house was in a mess. Nell had dusted and tidied and made beds all morning, then given Penny her dinner and lain down beside her for a rest. When they awoke there was still no sound from Pearl's part of the house.

Nell took her sewing bag and sought out her favorite spot and settled herself here to spend the remainder of the afternoon. She was glad to be out of the house. She hoped Pearl would have slept it off soon.

Nell felt quiet and at peace. For one thing, she was alone on the ranch, or practically alone. And another thing, Penny's baptism had come off at last. Two of Nell's women friends and Howard and Ken had been the godparents.

"What is the name of this child?"

"Penelope Margaret."

"Dost thou in the name of this child, renounce the devil and all his works . . . wilt thou keep God's holy will and commandments and walk in the same all the days of thy life?"

"I will, by God's help."

Howard had taken it in his stride, but not Ken. He took his responsibilities seriously. Renouncing the devil and all his works for that little bundle of TNT—a big order! Ken had had a very funny look of despairing disapproval on his face when Penny had begun to be naughty.

Nell looked up. Penny was running along the barbed-wire fence. In the sky overhead some chicken hawks were tilting and circling. One of them gave a series of raucous cries. The bull had stopped roaring. There was no wind, the day was extraordinarily quiet. Pilgrim lay in the shadow, his eyes on Nell.

Cricket, the Bull, Menaces Baby Penny

Nell took another piece of thread and threaded her needle. She took up the fine nainsook, found her place in the scalloped edge and began weaving of her needle.

She looked up to see what Penny was doing and could not find her.

Nell stood up swiftly, her sewing dropping to the ground. She looked at the creek running so close to her, but it was shallow—if Penny had fallen in she would have made an outcry.

Then she saw her. The baby was seated in the midst of a clump of the flame-colored Indian paintbrush, pulling at the stalks, gathering them in her hand. These flowers were at the base of a towering clump of rocks in the pasture beyond the barbed-wire fence — how had the child got there? Through the fence? She went everywhere.

Nell went and leaned on one of the fence posts. "What's baby doing?" she called.

Penny said, "One, two, fee, fi, ten, ate, two, fee—"

Suddenly the baby stopped counting. She pointed and said, "Doggie, doggie—" She gurgled with laughter. There was a little chipmunk darting across the rock above her. It came to a stop and sat up, nibbling its fingers.

"Not a doggie, darling," said Nell, "that's a chipmunk."

Then the corner of her eye caught a movement — something big and dark coming silently down the meadow.

Cricket. His eyes were on the white dress of the baby and the patch of scarlet flowers.

Nell dropped to the ground and rolled under the wire. Her skirt caught in the barbs. She attempted to force herself through, so embedding the barbs more firmly in the strong cloth. With a muffled scream she exerted all her strength and jerked and tore at it.

She saw Cricket reach the baby, lower his head and stretch his nose out, sniffing at her. Penny drew back a little at the sight and smell of the great dark head so close to her, and then said, questioningly, "Doggie?" She reached out a tiny hand.

Cricket's right hoof went back and under, gouging up the ground in a cloud of dust. A deep rumble came from within him, and at this terrifying sound, Penny burst into wild crying and tried to scramble to her feet. The bull turned his head and advanced it slightly, presenting the horn.

Nell flung herself upon him, bringing her clenched fist down across his nose. She snatched up the baby and leaped for the rocks. She felt the blow of Cricket's charge against her thigh and stumbled. She clawed at the rock with her right hand, clutching Penny to her with her left. She clambered up the first, the lowest of the rocks.

To get a grip on the stone with one hand, to pull up her skirts so that her bare knees could fasten upon it too—it was a frenzied effort that left her fingers and knees bleeding.

Pilgrim was barking and trying to deflect the attention of the bull. But a bull cannot easily change his target. With deep roars he swung his head low, this way and that, pushing Pilgrim aside as if he were a bothersome fly, but kept his eye on Nell. He forced himself through the smaller rocks at the foot of the great one, reaching a horn for Nell's body.

Nell screamed. She was slipping, she could not maintain her hold. Then her fingers caught in a crack and she clung there. Penny was striking out with legs and arms, trying to squirm out of her mother's clutch. Just above on the rock was a place where a piece seemed to have been sliced off, leaving a tilted shelf. Nell clawed herself up until she reached this shelf. It was not high enough to be safe, but she could climb no farther.

Suddenly Cricket, angered by Pilgrim's persistence, turned from the rock and galloped after the dog. Pilgrim fled, stopped, turned, the bull shot past him and ground to a stop. As Cricket swung himself around, Pilgrim catapulted himself at the bull's head and seized him by the nose.

Dog Makes Heroic Effort to Save Baby

In agony as the sharp teeth went into the tender flesh, the bull roared and swung his head in a great arc. Pilgrim was swung too, but his teeth held, and when, at last he went flying through the air, there was a small piece of bull flesh between his fangs, and blood streamed from Cricket's nose.

Pilgrim hit the earth with a thud and lay still. Cricket came after him.

Nell's head was bowed over the screaming child clasped to her breast. She was drenched with sweat. Her heart pounded so that it shook her whole body. She watched with despair. If Pilgrim was knocked out—

The bull was upon him.

With amazement she saw the dog crawl out from behind Cricket's forelegs and trot away to the fence before Cricket could be after him again. The bull had missed his aim and gone right over the dog.

Cricket came for the rock again. Frantic from the pain in his wounded nose, he raged around the base of it, forcing himself close, reaching up with his horns.

Nell's head wavered. There was a film before her eyes. She was afraid she was going to faint or to be so dizzy that she would fall off. "Dad-dee's-ba-ba" shrieked Penny with an accompaniment of wild howls, 'Dad-dee's-ba-ba!"

She looked wildly around. She could see the corner of the ranch house in the distance. Was no one there? No one to drive the bull away and get her down from here?

Within herself she was screaming for Rob, but Rob was far away —besides he had refused to get rid of the bull . . . and now this . . . it was all his fault—rage at her husband mingled with her terror.

New Vegetable May Edge Out Spinach

Faithful, old spinach, the nutritious vegetable whose edibility has been challenged by generations of children and many of their parents, may be pushed off the American dinner table.

A new green vegetable from Java which tastes better than regular spinach will be marketed in a limited way for the first time this year, frozen or canned.

The contender is called Florida spinach, but will grow over most of the United States in spite of its name. It is low in fiber, high in vitamins and has no oxalic acid, the chemical which makes spinach and beet greens hard to digest for some people.

Packing Peaches

Peaches or pears that must stand between peeling and packing should be placed in cold salt water to prevent discoloration. Add two teaspoons of salt to each quart of water. Rinse in clear, cold water before packing. Or use a Vitamin C tablet or special ascorbic acid preparation now available.

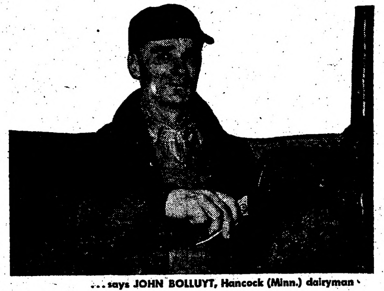
"FARMERS GAIN TWO WAYS
... through LAND O' LAKES"



... says JOHN BOLLUYT, Hancock (Minn.) dairyman

"By bringing us farmers together in our own organization, LAND O'LAKES has helped us two ways," says Mr. Bolluyt, an owner-patron of the Hancock Cooperative Creamery Co. "We gain a new advantage in marketing through LAND O'LAKES ... and another in buying feeds, seeds and some of the equipment we use on our dairy farms. And at a LAND O'LAKES creamery—because we own it ourselves—we know we're going to get a square deal, every time. Our creamery was one of the first in LAND O'LAKES—and we're still in there pitching." Yes—and there are thousands of other farmers just as glad as Mr. Bolluyt that they're working together the LAND O'LAKES way. Any man who milks cows owes it to himself to find out how he can gain, as others have—by selling through LAND O'LAKES.

Otter Tales
By . . . Reddy Kilowatt
A monthly column of news and information published by Otter Tail Power Company, Fergus Falls, Minnesota

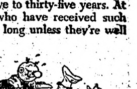
A couple of weeks ago I was putting long handles on "short" circuits out by Carrington, North Dakota, when I heard my name being called: "Hey, Reddy, wait a minute . . . wait for me!" Well, I finally skidded to a stop after stubbing my toe on an insulator and dropping a sack of brand new 110 volts.

TURBINE AT DEVILS LAKE PLANT NO. 24.

I looked down at the road and saw a little boy. "My name's Jimmy," he said. "What's a tur-bean, Reddy? Teacher asked me to find out what a tur-bean is." Well, for Jimmy, and for all the rest of you folks, here's a picture of one of the turbines at the Otter Tail plant in Devils Lake, taken while open for annual inspection and overhaul. It works like a water wheel. The small picture shows the wheel—some folks call it a spindle. Steam from a whoppin' big boiler pushes against the blades on this spindle and turns it 3,600 times every minute. This runs the 7,500 kilowatt generator to make the electricity you depend on for so many everyday conveniences. There's at least one of these giant turbines in every Otter Tail steam plant.

Jimmy asked me if a turbine cost a lot of money. It sure does. All electric equipment costs a lot of money. Making electricity on a large scale (that's the only way to keep the cost down) requires an investment of forty thousand dollars in plants and equipment behind every power company employee. That's ten times the average for other kinds of manufacturing.

This is one of many reasons why the Otter Tail Power Company appreciates its employees, who are so vital to its success. One way the company shows its appreciation is through the presentation of service awards. During July and August, 91 employees received awards in recognition of years of service ranging from five to thirty-five years. At the present time there are 363 employees who have received such awards. Folks don't stick around a place that long unless they're well satisfied.



Being on the job myself all the time, I know I'm a lot more SPEEDY than gas. Now the folks at General Electric are backing me up. They made some tests not long ago, on cooking with electricity, and found out that electricity boils a quart of water 22 per cent FASTER than gas! As everyone knows, cooking with electricity is cleaner, too—no soot and dirt on pots and pans, and no contamination of the air. In fact, for SPEED, CLEANLINESS and ECONOMY, you just can't beat cooking by electricity!

Honor Dairyman Chosen

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Skjerping were chosen to represent the Holt Cooperative Creamery as "Honor Dairyman" at the Red River Valley Dairymen's convention which will be held at Fergus Falls on October 21st. Their expenses and free tickets to the banquet will be paid by the creamery. They will also be presented with a beautiful framed diploma, which takes place in the afternoon program.

The former winners from the Holt Creamery have been Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Stienhauer in 1947; Mr. and Mrs. John Luoto in 1948 and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Anderson in 1949. These awards were given on the merits of quantity and quality of dairy products, herd improvements, and all-around dairy production methods used throughout year after year for many years past.

We wish to congratulate these winners. past and present, and look forward to next year when we again will be called upon to select another worthy dairdman and his wife, to share this honor.

We also urge all the dairymen if at all possible, to attend this Red River Valley Dairymen's Convention at Fergus Falls on October 21; it will be well worth your time and effort. We also urge you to become members of this worthy organization. Ask your creamery manager for a membership blank, and he will fix you up.

Cooperatively Yours,

C & C Plan Appreciation Day

Plans have been going forward and a day set aside to pay tribute to patrons of all business places in Holt. The friendly atmosphere that surrounds a small community is at all times appreciated by its business men. How to show that appreciation in the best possible way has been the subject of discussion at the past meetings of the Civic and Commerce Association. Plans are now underway for an evening of getting together and the business men of Holt will treat coffee and lunch for patrons, and also forms of entertainment that should please all. The Civic and Commerce Association invites everybody to come in and have a good time Wednesday evening November 1st.

At all of Holt's business places will be found guessing contests. Don't fail to ask about them. Also, you will receive tickets for a chance to win $25.00, $15.00 and $10.00 for purchases of $1.00 and over. All these prizes will be given on Wednesday evening, November 1st.

Following is a letter from Mrs. E. O. Nybakken. Mr. Nybakken was Superintendent of the Holt School for a number of years. Mrs. Nybakken taught in the High School here.

Dear Mabel:

The Nybakkens have changed their residence. We bought a home in township of Burlington. We are only 14 miles from Ernie's office now - we were 41 miles while in Canaan. It isn't a new house. (educators don't make that much money) but it is a comfortable one situated on 3 acres of land. The children like it a lot. Both the girls (Lorna 12 and Lib 9) go to a lovely new school. George doesn't start until next year.

When I read about all my old pupils that are married and have children I begin to realize I'm getting older. Lorna is as big as I am, and in the 8th grade already. Doesn't seem possible.

Ernie enjoys his job a lot. He is the head of the rural superintendents and supervisors for the St. Dept. of Education. He has an office in Hartford but he has to "trouble shoot" all over the state. Keeps him busy.

The whole reason for this note is to tell you our address. R. F. D. No. I, Bristol, Conn.

Give our regards to all our friends in Holt. We enjoy reading about them in the News.

Sincerely,
Bettie Nybakken.

New Use
For Old Windmills

I drove past Larson's farm last week and saw him perched on top of his 75-year-old windmill. "Still planning on tearing it down?" I shouted up to him.

"Not on your life," says Curly as he climbs down. "I'm getting myself a television set from Buzz Ellis' and he says this windmill is going to come in mighty handy."

"You see," Curly went on, "I'm going to put my TV antenna right on top of it. Since the windmill is higher than the house, I'll get the best reception around here—but if it wasn't for Buzz and his advice, I'd have scrapped it."

From where I sit, Curly's success as a farmer and his popularity in town is due, in a large part, to his open-mindedness and his willingness to listen to people and their opinions. He'll listen to Buzz Ellis over a malted milk or he and I can talk politics—each with a glass of temperate beer. Yes, Curly's as modern as television itself!

October Worst Accident Month

Autnmn, which by the calendar starts Sept. 23, is the most dangerous season of the year, the Minnesota Highway Department cautions motorists. October according, to the Department's accident records, has the highest average of traffic deaths, and September is usually second.

Principal causes are early darkness and failure of motorists to adjust their driving habits to seasonal conditions. The Department offers these rules as an aid to safe night driving:

1. Slow down at sundown. Slow down when visibility is poor and when road surfaces are slippery. Control speed so you can always stop safely in the space clearly illuminated by your headlights.
2. Keep windshield and lamps clean. Keep headlights properly aimed.
3. Correct faulty eyesight. Consult physician or oculist.
4. Obey traffic signals, Stop signs, speed, and warning signs.
5. Keep alert for pedestrians, unlighted or dimly lighted vehicles, foreign objects in the roadway, animals and farm implements.
6. Keep your car in good mechanical condition, especially lights, brakes, tires and steering gear.
7. If possible keep a window open for better hearing and ventilation,
8. Keep a clear head. Don't drive after drinking. Don't drive when very tired. Get plenty of sleep before starting on a long trip. Stop and rest frequently.
9. Use proper headlight beam, upper beam on rural roads when there are no vehicles within 1,000 feet, lower beam when approaching other vehicles and when driving on well lighted highways or city streets.
10. Do not stop on highway at night. If necessary to stop, pull off on the shoulder. If emergency makes this impossible, keep parking lights and inside dome lights on. Use flares or reflectors if possible. See that taillight is not obscured.

Funeral services will be held Saturday afternoon at 2:00 at the Nazareth Lutheran church. Burial will be in the Bethlehem cemtery west of Holt.

Complete obituary will be published next week.

Of Great Value

Lawyer: "But why do you think your thumb worth $20,000?"

Woman: "Because that's the thumb I kept my husband under."

UNFAIR QUESTION

Beamish, a new employee, had been caught coming in late for work three times already and this fourth morning, the foreman decided to read the riot act.

"Look here, Beamish," he snapped "don't you know what time we start work around here?"

"No sir," said Beamish. "They're always working when I get here."

Wrong Direction

Mrs. Smith was relating her grievances over the garden fence.

"My husband is such a flirt," she complained. "I just can't trust him anywhere."

"Never mind, my dear," her friend consoled her. "He's probably only reverting to type."

"That's where you're wrong," said Mrs. Smith grimly. "He's reverting to typists."

They Weren't Glad

A young governor in an eastern state was asked to address the prisoners at the State Penitentiary. It was his first speech after election and he was somewhat nervous.

He started off, "Fellow citizens." Then realizing that the prisoners were deprived of citizenship during their imprisonment, he stopped and started again, "Fellow prisoners." He realized too late his second mistake, so he continued, "Well, anyway, I'm glad to see so many of you here."

AMONG FRIENDS

The shipwrecked sailor dragged himself up on the beach of what appeared to be a desert island. After resting, he decided to explore his new home and started inland. But suddenly he spied a column of smoke ascending from a grove of trees, and with some trepidation, crept silently toward the source of the smoke.

He was only a few feet away, when a voice boomed out: "Blankety-blank it, Bill, why the blankety-blank did you trump my ace?"

The sailor sank to his knees and murmured gratefully: "Thank heavens! I've found Christians!"

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Johnson Resigns U. S. Defense Post; Truman Requests Increased Taxes; 1950 Crop Prospects Above Average

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

JOHNSON:
Resigns Defense Post

In a move that caught much of the nation by surprise, President Truman accepted the resignation of Louis A. Johnson as secretary of defense and nominated Gen. George C. Marshall to succeed him.

The move was surprising in that the President had insisted up until a few days before the announcement that he would not ask for Johnson's resignation.

Johnson had been under attack on Capitol Hill and elsewhere on the ground that he was fundamentally responsible for defense weaknesses brought into glaring focus by the Korean war.

There were rumors also of a wide breech between the defense chief and Secretary of State Dean Acheson which added to the confusion and demands that Mr. Truman accept his resignation.

Under the existing unification law, no person who had been on active military duty within the past 10 years was eligible for the post of secretary of defense. President Truman immediately asked legislation to enable Marshall to accept.

Although opposition to the waiver arose immediately after Marshall said he would come out of retirement to accept the post, there was little doubt from the first the law would be changed and the general confirmed.

TRUMAN:
A Tough Speech

President Truman in a second report to the nation in as many weeks said cost of defense could soar to a rate of $30 billion annually by next June and that inflation was inevitable "unless we do something about it."

The chief executive also announced the creation of a stabilization agency to hold prices in check during the war emergency—or to impose price controls "when they are needed."

He named W. Stuart Symington, chairman of the national security resources board, to coordinate the administration of these new powers.

Observers reported the President's speech a tough one, much stronger than had been anticipated. Without mincing words he called for new tax increases "as soon as possible," on top of $4,508 million increase now in process.

Shortly before his radio talk he issued an executive order designating agencies to enforce priorities, limit civilian goods output if necessary, lend money for defense plant expansion and allocate scarce materials.

"For the consumer," he said, "the guiding principle must be: Buy only what you really need and can not do without."

If the housewife follows that rule, he promised, "there will be enough of the essentials—in fact, enough of almost everything — to go around."

For businessmen, he said, the operating rule should be; "Do not pile up inventories; hold your prices down."

And for labor he set forth this guide: "Do not ask for wage increases beyond what is needed to meet the rise in the cost of living."

Apology

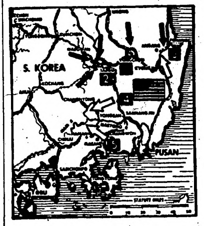
President Truman grins broadly as he displayed a distinguished guest medal presented to him by the Marine Corps League following a surprise personal appearance before the marine vets to amplify his apology for saying the USMC has a Stalin-type propaganda machine.

WRECK:
33 Soldiers Die

A tragic and unexplainable train collision claimed the lives of 33 soldiers and seriously injured many others near Coshocton, O.

A troop train carrying 700 members of the Pennsylvania national guards, was rammed by the crack Spirit of St. Louis. The huge Diesel pulling 17 cars, knocked the rear coach into the air, smashed the second car aside, and plowed into the third.

Assault Fails



Although Communist troops continued to apply pressure on the northern front near Yongchon (1) and in the vicinity of Pohang (3) their all-out offensive has stalled again. New attacks were reported in the area of Taegu (2). In the south U.N. troops made slight advances in the area of Changnyong and Yongsan (5).

CROP PROSPECTS:
In Line With Average

The department of agriculture predicted a harvest volume higher than in five of the past eight years and in any year prior to 1946. It forecast the volume at 125 per cent of the 1923-32 average.

Up until the latest report, a drop in farm production had been predicted all along the line. Now the department was reporting only cotton, peanuts, peaches, apricots, pecans, rye, and dry peas appear smaller than average.

Corn remained virtually unchanged at a bumper crop level despite unfavorable growing weather.

Wheat total climbed above the billion-bushel mark to 1,012,000,000 bushels. This was an increase of about 15 million bushels over the August 1 estimate.

Other crops for which production prospects improved included oats, barley, flaxseed, sorghum grain, hay, soybeans, potatoes, sweet potatoes, tobacco, sugar beets, hops, apples, pears and grapes.

Soybean and sugar-beet production was indicated at a record level.

The department said prospects indicated production of grains will provide amply for the nation's expanding livestock industry.

KOREA:
Situation Dangerous

Military observers reported the situation in Korea still dangerous, but not critical, with the entire front the quietest in a long time.

North of Taegu, U. N. and Communist troops engaged in a heavy artillery duel with the invaders building up their forces for a possible new offensive in that area.

At the east-coast end of the northern front, U. N. forces were striving to seal a trap around an estimated 3,000 Communists who had tried to surround the air base six miles southeast of Pohang.

On the southern front American troops recaptured a ridge from the Reds four miles south of the confluence of the Nam and Nakton rivers.

In the air, fighter planes of the Far East air force continued around-the-clock aerial assaults that hit a record of 670 sorties in one day.

But the big news from Korea was that nobody talked anymore of an American "Dunquerque." Predictions of early victory, however, were hard to find.

The period of optimism returned because U. N. forces smashed the Red's largest offensive, the 50,000-man attack on the southwest front toward Pusan which began September 1.

Other counter-attacking U. N. forces succeeded in closing the gap torn in the northeastern defense wall by a Communist break-through toward Yongchon, gateway to Taegu.

On the front itself the general opinion persisted that the U. N. troops in Korea were there to stay even though they might have to give up more bloody ground. Even the pessimists seemed to believe that.

Miss America

The nation, like a boy playing hooky from school, took time from the grind of mobilization, war and rising prices to name a new Miss America and chuckle while doing so with pleasure.

She is brown-haired Yolande Betbeze of Mobile, Ala. And for those who want the statistics she weighs 119, is 5 feet 5½, and has a 35-inch bust, 24-inch waist, and 35½-inch hips.

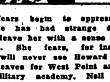
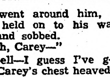
TUNE IN "GRAND OLE OPRY", SATURDAY NIGHTS ON NBC



GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING



By Mary O'Hara

Nell's fears begin to oppress her again. She has had strange dreams and they leave her with a sense of apprehension. She fears, for instance, that she will never see Howard again after he leaves for West Point and life in the military academy. Nell again beseeches Rob to get rid of the bull, Cricket, contending the barbed-wire enclosures aren't enough protection against him. Rob ridicules the idea and tells Nell he and Dr. Scott think she should take a long rest in a hospital. She scoffs at the suggestion. Nell misses her little daughter Penny and is horrified to find the child in the field with the bull. She rushes to Penny.

CHAPTER XV

She began to cry. How long was this going on? How long could she cling up here? If only Pilgrim would drive the bull far enough away she would slide down and dash for the fence.

She took off the bandana she wore on her head, wound it into a rope. She tied this tightly around Penny's body and put the ends through her own belt, knotting it fast—then consciousness life her. Penny wriggled and squirmed, stretching out her arms, yelling pitifully, "Dad-dee's 'ba-ba—" but she was held fast and could not get loose from the inert figure that lay on the tilted shelf of rock.

With an impact like the crash of a wave, Nell leaped back to terrified consciousness.

Ah! As if he had heard her wish, Pilgrim was at the bull again and Cricket was galloping after him, head down, heels and tail high in the air. His bellows were like thunder. Pilgrim was agile. Again and again he saved himself, then bored in to nip at haunch or shoulder as the hot charging mass swept past him.

He was watching for another chance at the nose.

Ah! He had it! His teeth closed! Once again the frenzied beast swung his head and the dog with it. Pilgrim went sailing. But this time, when he hit the ground, Cricket was there. He made a sideways scooping motion with his head. It came up with a small twisted form on the horns. Down again. The bull kneeled. Pilgrim disappeared from view—the bull was making motions of grinding his head into the ground.

Nell heard the death cry of the dog, turned her face to the rock, clawing it to keep it from whirling out from under her. The whole universe whirled. She knew that she was fainting again—Oh, Pilgrim! Pilgrim!

Pearl groaned. She sat on the edge of the bed and held her head in her hands. She had been sitting that way some time, listening to Cricket and muttering profane epithets directed at him and his incessant noise.

She heard a horse galloping up the road. Leaning to the corner of the window, she saw it swing off the road across the field. It was Ken on Flicka and they were going hell-for-leather. Where on earth was he going? He was heading straight for the barbed-wire fence! He would never try to jump it! No—he pulled Flicka up on her haunches and leaped off, then seized the post of the fence and vaulted over and vanished from view.

At this point, Pearl dropped the binoculars on the terrace and ran screaming up through the Gorge. The men were in the corral, just returning with the light wagon from a day spent on the fences.

"The bull!" she screamed. "Gus! Tim! Get the pitchforks! The bull's killing Ken!"

Gus Tells How Ken Held the Bull Off

"Ya, Boss," said Gus. "like I'm tellin' you, Ken, he held de bull off de rock wid his quirt while his mudder come down wid de baby. He go fur him gude. He give yells. He bang him in de face—eyes—nose—und Cricket he squeel lak a pig, and he back off, an' he turn an' run; den he cum back at Ken, an' Ken, he yump yust in time, den he run after him an' he yell like crazy, an' beat him an' lash him, an' Cricket turn 'round ag'in, an' back avay—he back an' back—an' Ken he give it to um in de face all de time—den we come wid de forks—"

Rob, Howard and Carey were hearing the story at ten o'clock that night. They had just reached home and were standing in a group on the front terrace in the darkness.

"He killed the bull, you say—" Rob's voice was slow.

Chills ran up and down Carey's back.

"Ya, Boss. De Missus, she faint, she cum to. She faint agin. Ken got her to de house while we drive de bull to de corral. He kep' roarin' an' pawin'. He mak' a turrible racket. His nose an' his eyes hurt him. He smell blood an' he taste it. He's turrible mad. De Missus she cum down from de house holdin' de big express rifle. Ken he walk along wid her. She reach de corral fence an' put de gun troo de bars. Ken took de gun avay from her an' she begin to cry."

A harsh sound came from Rob's throat.

"Ken, he say, 'You stand avay, men.' He say it yoost lak dat, Boss. Ve get out de vay. Ken shoot de bull. De bull do down—mak' a big crash. De Missus, she go down too. Ken he pick her oop again, he say to me, 'Gus, you hitch chains to his horns, take de truck, cart him avay, dump him down de ole mine shaft'."

"And you've done it?"

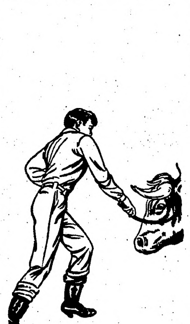
"Ya. Ve drug heem avay. He's oop dere—down de mine shaft."

There was silence for a few moments. Carey thought of the truck dragging the great inert form over the half-mile of road, then across the prairie to the trees and the old mine shaft—of the great body hurtling down, as limp, as helpless as a little dead gopher and the crash at the bottom piling him up in a shapeless mass.

"Go—osh!" exclaimed Howard under his breath.

"And Mrs. McLaughlin wanted to go in to town?" Rob's voice was labored.

"Ya. Ken, he say he go for de doctor. She say, 'No, tak me to heem.' Boss, she hold her throat. Her eyes stick out. She bust out



"He bang him in de face . . ."

cryin'. Den she laugh. Den she pass out. Ve put her in de car. Ken, he drive her avay."

"The baby?" Rob's voice was sharp.

"Ken, he tuk her too. Vas nobody here but Pearl."

"Thank you, Gus." Rob turned to the others. "Go to bed, children. I'll go on in to town."

He walked around the house, got into the station wagon which he had just parked on the hill and drove off into the darkness.

Carey felt awed. When, at last they went to bed, she lay awake, thinking it all over, thinking of Ken. Again and again she rehearsed the scene as Gus had described it. It was like Ken to do that . . . he was brave—hot tears filled her eyes—he was the bravest, most wonderful boy she had ever known or could imagine . . . she wished she had not been so mean to him, teasing him all the time. She turned her face to the pillow and burst out crying. She fell asleep at last, only to wake with a jump after some hours.

It was the sound of cars that had waked her. She ran to the window and parted the curtains. She saw the two cars coming. Headlights blazed, then wheeled past the house. A moment later voices approached her window. Rob and Ken came past, talking in low tones. They walked close together. Rob carried the sleeping baby in his left arm. His right arm was laid across Ken's shoulders.

Carey Tells Ken That He's 'Wonderful'

Then they disappeared from her view. There was the sound of the front door opening, more low voices, then their steps going upstairs.

Ken was home. Carey lay thinking that they were under the same roof again, she and Ken. And Ken was certainly a hero.

Suddenly she saw a dark form before her.

When she realized that it was Ken, it was a shock. Of all people, she would have wanted to be with Ken; to say something to him about what he had done, to touch his hand and feel his eyes looking at her.

She stood there, her hair hanging on her shoulders, tears streaming from her eyes, her hands outstretched to him, forgetting that she was dressed only in her white silk pajamas.

"Oh, Ken! I do think you're so wonderful!"

Bewildered, thrilled, weary, excited, Ken moved hesitantly toward her. How close did he dare to go? He put his arms around her, he hugged her tight, he bent his head down upon hers. He felt the slim little-girl body against him, her arms went around him, and her hands held on to his waist. She cried and sobbed.

"Gosh, Carey—"

"We-ell—I guess I've g-g-got to go—" Carey's chest heaved and her breath came with catches. She drew herself out of his arms and wiped her eyes with her hands. "Good-night, Ken—"

"Good-night, Carey."

He stood there while she pattered away from him. He looked up at the sky, all around, as if he were dazed. Then, suddenly, with fists clenched, he thrust both arms upward as high as he could reach—a gesture of triumph. Then he sped silently indoors.

Nell was kept under opiates for several days. The fainting, the incessant weeping stopped. She was to remain in the hospital until she had entirely recovered from the shock of her terrible experience and until the doctor had had time to make a thorough examination of her. A competent infant's nurse was sent out to the ranch to take care of Penny.

Howard and Ken walked up and down the platform of the Tie Siding station. Evidently each of the boys had something on his mind. They were not talking. Howard felt as if the solid ground had fallen out from under his feet. To go away from home and not have his mother there to say goodby to him! The doctor wanted no visitors at the hospital, so Howard had had no last words, no kiss, no little lecture on the love of God to take away with him. And his father was at a stockman's meeting, so there was only Ken to see him off. It made him feel like a stranger, drifting off into the world with no one caring.

Ken cleared his throat with embarrassment. Both boys had been swept beyond their recent estrangement over Carey and yet it had not been thrashed out. It stood there between them.

Ken was whipping up courage, there wasn't much time, the train would be along any minute.

Finally he blurted it out. "Howard, you know that time you and I had the fight?"

"Yep."

"Well, I wish you'd tell me what had happened."

"You mean with Carey?"

"Yes. What had you done to make her so mad?" His heart quickened now that he had actually asked for it.

Howard turned his head in a haughty manner. He never permitted his younger brother to question any of his actions. But this was a different Ken, and back of the quiet intensity of his face and his questioning eyes was authority! Ken asked as if he had a right to know. Besides, Howard was weakened by the sadness he was feeling about his mother.

Howard Eases Ken's Jealousy Feeling

He looked away rather sheepishly. "Oh, it wasn't anything like what you thought! I never kissed Carey, or even tried to."

Ken hid his jubilance. He had kissed her—he was ahead then—way ahead. "But she was so mad at you," he said. "I heard her."

"Oh, it was just a lot of kid nonsense," said Howard. "I pushed her off the rock up above Deercreek when we were fishing. She fell in that shallow pool—all mud. She looked so funny when she got out. I laughed at her."

"But you let me think—you said—you fought me—" stammered Ken, overcome with relief and happiness. No wonder Carey had told him nothing about this humiliating experience!

"Well, I was sore that you would call me to account for anything I did. Why shouldn't I kiss her if I wanted to, if she would let me? What business was it of yours?"

There was the train in the distance. Both boys fastened their eyes on it. Howard grabbed one of his suitcases, Ken the other. Howard looked around, almost wildly. He felt as if he were plunging into an abyss—he turned to his younger brother and Ken turned as eagerly, as warmly to him. Their right hands clasped — impulsively they leaned to each other and hugged.

"It's all right, Ken. Carey doesn't care a rap for me."

"Gosh, Howard—"

"That's right—"

"I'm awfully sorry, Howard—"

"Hey! I don't care a rap either—"

The train roared in. There was to be only an instant's stop for this one passenger. Even before it quite stopped the porter let down the steps, swung off and seized the bags. Howard got aboard, turning to wave to Ken. Both boys were lightened of their distress, their faces were flushed with love and happiness. Ken saluted smartly.

"Hi, Cadet!" he yelled. "Good luck!" There was a broad grin on his face.

The conductor waved his arm, the train picked up speed and Howard vanished from view as the steps and door clanged shut.

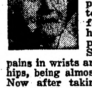
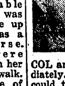
Just a Few of Thousands Upon Thousands of Interesting Records of Folks With Such Deficiencies Who Have Been Helped

Mrs. C. C. Keller, 1629½ Frederick Avenue, St. Joseph, Missouri, says HADACOL really has put a stop to her neuritis pains. She was in a very bad condition with aches and pains and unable to sleep and was forced to give up her position as a practical nurse. She had severe pains in wrists and stiffness in her hips, being almost unable to walk. Now after taking one bottle of HADACOL, she is able to do her own housework. She most enthusiastically recommends HADACOL to all sufferers from neuritis pains.



Link Robinson (a steel worker for over 20 years), 519 Lindsey, Newport, Kentucky: "When your stomach is in bad shape as mine, couldn't eat, gas pains, stomach bloating and nervousness, then your body doesn't get the proper foods it needs. My boss told me about HADACOL and I started taking it immediately. After the second bottle I could tell a definite improvement. Now I can eat anything I want to. Best of all I haven't got those terrific gas pains and stomach bloating"



Mrs. L. Crifasi, 327 N. 14th Street, Springfield, Illinois: "I am elated with the wonderful results obtained by taking HADACOL. I had emotional indigestion, which is stomach distress and makes a person feel down and out. HADACOL seemed to be prepared for my ailment, for it made a new woman of me."

Floyd Mabe, 1401A South 7th Street, St. Louis, Missouri: "For some time after a wartime injury I had been troubled with neuritis pains in my legs and could not work. Nothing seemed to help me until I tried HADACOL. After taking a half bottle I seemed to feel better. My wife told me it was only my imagination, but I continued to take HADACOL and up to the present have taken 18 bottles. Now I feel fine with no more pains in my legs." (HADACOL is so effective because it relieves THE REAL CAUSE of neuritis aches when due to such deficiencies. Why don't you give HADACOL a chance to help you?)

Mrs. John Geary, 840 Ursuline Street, New Orleans, Louisiana: "I had such a nervous stomach I was unable to eat regularly. Lots of times I was unable to hold any food on my stomach. Then I heard about HADACOL. After the first few bottles I could tell a definite improvement. Now my stomach doesn't trouble me at all. I eat anything I want. HADACOL is wonderful. You can see that, if it did so much for me after suffering so." (A big improvement is often noticed within a few days' time. One of the many advantages of HADACOL is that continued use helps prevent such stomach distress from returning. Don't continue to suffer. Start taking HADACOL today!)

W. E. Hoxworth, a skilled maintenance man in Waco, Texas: "I almost had to give up my job because of suffering from stomach distress. I couldn't hold my food, as no food agreed with me. After hearing about HADACOL and completing a second bottle, I began to feel better and regain the weight I lost, and suffered no more indigestion. I now take HADACOL regularly to help stay well. (Why don't you try HADACOL?)

Mrs. J. Scieszinski, 514 Kruger, Ottumwa, Iowa: "My daughter, Marilyn Sue, is five years old and for some time lacked pep, had a poor appetite, was generally run-down. Since giving her HADACOL, we have noticed wonderful results. She has a much better appetite, eats everything on the table and doesn't seem tired like she used to. Incidentally, she likes to take her HADACOL, too." (Kiddies sure do like HADACOL."

Senator Dudley J. LeBlanc—the Man Responsible for the Great New HADACOL

Now! Thanks to the tireless efforts in scientific research of Senator Dudley J. LeBlanc—eminent statesman of Louisiana and creator of this great new HADACOL nutritional formula—it's at last possible to relieve the REAL CAUSE of such ailments as neuritis pains, stomach distress, gas pains, heartburn, indigestion, insomnia, certain nervous disorders and a general run-down condition due to lack of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Iron and Niacin.

Senator LeBlanc has just completed a modern $250,000 manufacturing plant and a similar one is well under way so that this wonderful HADACOL will always be available to the public.

What the Great HADACOL Does . . .

No longer do you have to be satisfied with symptomatic relief—you can start this very day, and relieve the REAL CAUSE of such ailments with HADACOL. Get that wonderful HADACOL feeling everyone is talking about! A big improvement in the way you feel is often noticed in a few days.

And continued use of HADACOL helps prevent such ailments from coming back. Naturally, there's an explanation for this. You see, HADACOL not only feeds deficient, run-down systems with extra quantities of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Iron and Niacin, but also helpful amounts of precious Calcium, Phosphorus and Manganese — elements so vital to help maintain good health and guard against such deficiency sickness.

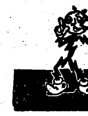
RABBITS FOR SALE CHEAP!

THE BARGAIN THAT ISN'T A BARGAIN!

Sure, you can buy rabbits cheap . . . but, like lots of other things with "bargain tags", they cause you more trouble and expense than they're worth.

Take a municipally-owned light plant as an example. It looks like a bargain — it looks like a short-cut to cheaper electricity — but how your troubles multiply when you own one!

There's a logical reason for that. Manufacturing low cost electricity is dependent upon mass production. Municipal power plants can't compete with this mass production technique. Neither can they match the 17 per cent reduction in electric rates which private power companies have been able to achieve in the past ten years.

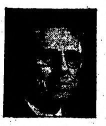


Your electric company -- a development of free enterprise through private initiative -- is your best source of low-cost electricity.

OTTER TAIL POWER COMPANY

Let's not sell Minnesota short!

"So much has been said recently about the failing iron ore supply in Minnesota that the wrong impression may have been left in people's minds," writes E. W. Davis, director of the Mines Experiment Station, University of Minnesota. "When we speak of an ore shortage, we mean a shortage of the types of ore we have been using. Actually, Minnesota has enough iron minerals to supply America for a thousand years. The iron is there, and the research men are there, developing methods for its utilization . . ."



Davis

CERTAINLY IT WOULD BE WRONG to sell Minnesota short as an iron ore producer. Lump all our ore resources together—high-grade, low-grade and taconite—and the total is impressive.

It would be just as wrong to blithely assume our ore worries are over. Developing the newer, leaner stuff—the kinds that must be developed to keep the industry alive—is some job . . .

- RESEARCH IS NEEDED—the ablest sort—to whip the problem of making useable ore out of "useless" materials.
- MONEY IS NEEDED—scores of millions of dollars—to put up and start up great new concentrating plants and taconite "factories."
- EXPERIENCE IS NEEDED—and plenty of it—before the ore producers can be sure that furnace-worthy ores can be created cheaply enough to compete with ores outside Minnesota borders.

What's happened so far?

For years, Minnesota's mining industry—with the valued help of Dr. Davis and the Mines Experiment Station—has been grappling with ore-processing problems. Already it has 48 concentrating plants in operation, enriching certain types of low-grades. Just about every mining firm is now doing research work. Some have elaborate laboratories, seeking the best way to enrich still-leaner ores.

What's going to happen next?

The minute the ore producers know that good-enough ores can be manufactured at low-enough costs, they're going to put the necessary millions into building a vast new ore-processing industry.

But the problem isn't theirs alone: it belongs to ALL MINNESOTA. Every citizen of this state stands to gain if the new ore-treating industry pans out. Every citizen can HELP it succeed by understanding the iron ore situation and cooperating toward a solution. You can help by judging this industry exactly as you would any other manufacturing industry whose development you'd like to encourage.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

Drivers Must See Danger To Avoid It

"You must see danger to avoid it." This slogan, says the Minnesota Highway Department, is emphasized by the fact that vision obscurement is a factor in one out of every four motor vehicle accidents reported to the Department.

Many of the vision obscurement are seasonal: fog and smoke in the fall; snow, sleet and frosted windshields in winter; mud splashed on the windshield in spring; growing crops, weeds, trees and bushes in summer.

Other vision obscurements are found in all season, such as defective wind-shields, buildings, signboards, hillcrests, parked cars embankments, moving cars, headlight glare, sun glare and decorations on the windshield.

Recreation

It should be remembered that recreation helps keep the family united.

"Turn your back on your best friend, when you load your gun" is the advice of Frank Blair, Director of Game and Fish, in the new hunting synopsis distributed last week. Copies are availbale through County Auditors and all stores selling hunting licenses.

In commenting on the hunting seasons Blair stated "the time has come when the hunter in the field must give some thought to the future of free hunting. The privilege of roaming fields at will can no longer be taken for granted. The hunter has certain definite obligations to the landowner".

Blair says "a sportsman will: 1 build good Farmer-Sportsmen relationships by asking permission to hunt on the farmer's land; 2. obey the game laws and help in their enforcement; 3. Hunt for recreation and not bag limits; 4. Hunt with his boy rather than for him; 5. Remember that fire is destructive both to man and wildlife; 6. Cooperate withe the Department of Conservation in a program of soil, water and forest conservation to perpetuate hunting for today and tomorrow."

Referendum Carries in Grygla

The Soil Conservation Service referendum in Eastern Marshall and Beltrami Counties on September 22 carried with 191 votes for a District and 10 votes against.

This means that the land owners in the Grygla area favor the establishment of a Soil Conservation Service District, and that an election for the purpose of selecting a Board of Supervisors for such a District will be held in the neart future.

The Soil Conservation is a Federal program designed to work with the farmers on their individual farms for the purpose of improving the productive capacity of the farm. This may cover many fields of activity such as: contours, terracing, strip farming, cropping systems, erosion control and on the farm drainage.

* * * *

It is evident that the main interest among farmers in the Grygla area is in drainage. This is a long time program which may include surveys of drainage outlets, as well as on the farm drainage of farm lands, according to F. W. Forbes, Marshall County Agent.

Large Amount of Posted Land in Area May Reduce Number Hunters This Year

Duck season will begin Friday at noon. As usual there will be a great many hunters in the territory around Thief Lake and Mud Lake Refuges, but one factor which may reduce the number of outside hunters this year is the vast area of farm land that has been posted

Ducks will be as numerous as in previous years in spite of the high water this spring. So far this newspaper has been unable to get much data on the number of geese, although Robley Hunt of the Mud Lake Refuge states there are some feeding in the federal reserve.

This year, the Gatzke community will be posted almost solidly against hunters. If anyone desires to hunt on land, they must first secure the permission or the property holder. It has been stated there may be some prosecutions this year for violation of the "no hunting" and "no trespassing" signs. Farmers complain that hunters do considerable damage to land and crops that are not harvested yet.

Hunters are urged to show farmers the courtesy of respecting their property.

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

As Nell seizes the child and climbs upon a precarious rock perch, Pilgrim again attacks the bull, seeking to divert the enraged animal's attention from the woman and child. Finally, Pilgrim is ground to death underneath the knees of the bull. Nell battles against a fainting spell as she clings with Penny to the rock. Pearl, a ranch helper, sees the situation and shouts for help. Ken arrives and drives Cricket off with a whip. Ranch hands rout the bull and Ken kills Cricket with a rifle brought from the house by Nell. Howard explains the scene Ken witnessed between him and Carey and the boys shake hands and make peace.

CHAPTER XVI

Nell was watching the time. She knew at what hour that train was taking her boy away from her, and without a goodby. Without the little lecture which he had asked for. To fail him like this!

She asked her nurse for writing paper and pencil. She was supposed to keep very quiet and she had to insist that if she were not allowed to write the letter it would make her more nervous than if she did it and got it off her mind.

She sat up against her pillows, drew up her knees, and placed the writing pad against them.

She put her pencil to the paper and began to write.

July 2nd
In hospital

Hello darling!

You've got away from me! But not away from my thoughts nor my pen. And I haven't forgotten that we didn't have a proper goodby and that we have not had our talk about the love of God.

I feel that I had made an engagement with you, to tell you of my thoughts on this subject, and I don't like to break engagements. This letter will be the little lecture you asked for. I will write you many more letters, but first to get this one off my mind—

This is an ambitious subject for me to tackle. St. Francis de Sales wrote a Treatise on the Love of God and it is about six hundred pages long, if I remember rightly, and very fine print! I won't ask you to read that. I'll just send you my own ideas on the subject, quite simple, almost infantile, and hope they will make sense to you, and that they will open a door for you.

To begin with — just one more word about the way LOVE bestows happiness. When you come to think of it, there is nothing that bestows happiness except love. Love is implicit in all praise, in admiration. You know how, in yourself, when you see some glorious thing, a sunset, or a beautiful face, or some of those exquisite scenes of nature that you now and then come upon, a great tide of praise, love and happiness rises in your heart until it seems that it will burst, and tears push up behind your eyes! Or perhaps it is the grandeur of a symphony. Or perhaps it is great courage or a noble, unselfish deed—and again that bursting love fills the heart. This can be traced down to the smallest thing. Imagine a young girl, about to go to her coming-out party. She sees her dress lying on the bed, clasps her hands (a classic attitude of praise and love!) and stands there in a trance of happiness. Or, a gathering of friends. Analyze your warm, happy feeling. You may call it good cheer, geniality, hospitality. These are other names for love.

Nell Cogitates Upon What Love Really Is

Let's take a very simple example. Penny, when she sees me the first thing in the morning. Or the puppies. They almost burst with love. Where do they get it? Where does Penny get it?

Well, Penny needs me. Penny is helpless without me. From the mother a baby gets security, food, warmth, tenderness, companionship and a thousand gifts that change and increase as the infant gets larger and needs more.

So first there is need.

Now what next? Second, I should say, the recognition of the source of good. It isn't long before the infant knows that all these things come from its mother. And what next? Gratitude. And here we have love, the full cup running over.

There one sees the evolution of love. First need, then recognition of the source of good (I wish I could find one word for that—perhaps you can) and then gratitude.

I think there is no love in the world that does not begin with those things.

The love of friends? Of course. The need, the recognition of that particular person as the friend, and then the gratitude.

The love of men and women? First, their great and permanent need, then the recognition of each other as possessors of all the gifts that could fill that need, then, if the gifts are bestowed—the great gratitude.

The love of God? First we find out how much we need Him. I think that a person who does not find that out, who is incapable of finding that out, who is always smug and self-sufficient, can never win this great happiness.

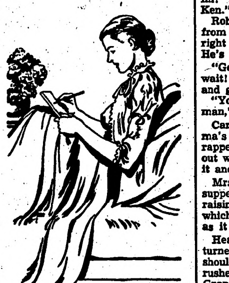
Then, needing Him, we grope around perhaps for years to find the source of good. And at last we do. Probably someone tells us, tells us in a way that we can accept and understand. The torch is lit from one hand to the other, and has been all down through the ages.

Try to imagine what life on this planet would be like if man had no conscience. Try to imagine it without beauty. Try to imagine the physical universe without order, plan, design.

If you think of things like that, Howard, perhaps, suddenly, your heart will "burn within you" and you will know that the flame of the love of God has been lit because you have recognized Him as the source of good.

Once you have the love of God it spills over onto everything, and your heart and and your life and your world are full of love and therefore full of happiness.

Now, my dear boy, write me the moment you have any spare time. I will write you again soon, something of less exalted nature.



Nell began to write.

I am feeling better already. Much love to the Cadet.

Mother.

And while Nell finished her letter, handed it to the nurse to mail and then lay back on her pillow, exhausted, Howard was sitting in the Pullman car, flooded with intense happiness, wondering in a dazed way how and why that sudden rush of brotherly love, that quick and ardent embrace and the glimpse of Ken's salute and laughter, had swept all the misery from his heart.

Four black mares were in Thunderhead's band. Buck had not been able to get close enough to them to identify Jewel by the white mark on her forehead, but he had seen Thunderhead more than once and also a number of colts. They were feeding in the flats of the headwaters of the Spindle River. This was a ravine running north and south, three or four miles west of Westgate. It was, roughly, half a mile wide, between broken mountain ridges that converged at the northern end, nearly meeting, then opening up again. Here would be the place to build the corral. It was a natural. The mountains which formed the sides of the ravine were ready-made wings. Within these, the fence wings could be built. Line riders could guard the ridges and the southern mouth of the ravine so that the horses could not wander away while the corral was being built.

This information was contained in a letter from Buck which was waiting for Rob McLaughlin when the Goose Bar station wagon drove up to the hotel in Westgate on a hot July afternoon.

Ken McLaughlin and Carey Marsh jumped out and began to unload the suitcases while Rob walked in to register.

By the time the boys had located a stable, they had gathered up half the town.

Happiness of Carey Pleases Uncle Beaver

As a matter of fact, Westgate was ready and prepared for these visitors. The day before there had arrived a large Cadillac limousine driven by an English groom and pulling a deluxe horse trailer. Out of the car had stepped an imposing lady who looked like the townspeople's idea of an English queen-mother, and a tall, thin old gentleman with a limp and an acousticon who was dressed in tan Cheyene pants and ten gallon hat. He was soon recognized, Beaver Greenway, owner of the famous stable of race horses in Idaho.

Carey was in the lobby of the hotel, clasped in the arms of her uncle. He gave her a resounding kiss, and put her off and looked at her.

"Bless my soul, Carey! How I've missed you! The Blue Moon wasn't the same without you!"

"Oh, Uncle Beaver, I'm so glad to see you!" She flung her arms around him again. "I feel as if I'd been away a month!"

"Have you been having a good time? Let me look at you!" He studied her again, his face becoming more serious as he listened to her telling of the wonderful time she had been having. "Carey, you've changed."

"Have I, Uncle Beaver?"

"My word!" He looked at her, turned her around, seized her shoulders. "Why, child alive! You're a different girl. Carey, I feel as if I'd never seen you really happy before!"

"Why, Uncle Beaver, what do you mean? Of course I've been happy!"

But he shook his head. "I've got to think about this. Something's happened, but I don't know just what. Maybe you've suddenly grown up."

"Where is Grandma, Uncle Beaver?"

"She went up to her room to take a nap. She ought to be awake now and ready to come down. Supper'll be ready soon." He turned to Rob who stood reading Buck's letter.

"Did you get your key, McLaughlin? I took a room for you and Ken."

Rob looked up. "Here's a letter from Buck. Says the horses are right over there west of that ridge. He's camping out near by."

"Gee!" said Ken. "I can hardly wait! I'd like to ride out right away and get a squint at Thunderhead!"

"You hold your horses, young man," said Rob.

Carey asked where her Grandma's room was, flew up the stairs, rapped softly on the door and without waiting to be answered, opened it and stepped in.

Mrs. Palmer, fully dressed for supper, was adjusting the shades, raising them a little to let in the air which was still warm, but not so hot as it had been at midday.

Hearing the door open, she turned, astonished that anyone should enter her room. Carey rushed forward, exclaiming, "Oh, Grandma!" and threw her arms around her.

In that instant's meeting Mrs. Palmer sensed that something was all wrong. With what assurance Carey had greeted her! How strongly those young arms held her! Where was that hesitation, the timidity that ought to have been there? Her face went pale. Her light grey eyes became stony beneath the fine black arches.

Grandmother's Irony Is Shock to Carey

She extricated herself from Carey's arms abruptly and backed away from the girl, smoothing her gown as if it had been roughly disarranged by a dog. She spoke with biting sarcasm, she made graceful bows, she sneered, she put on a scene.

"Oh, how do you do? Who is this, may I ask? A young lady! Quite a grand young lady!"

The impact of this upon Carey was shattering. She felt in her grandmother that rage which seemed to well up so easily. It was shocking to discover that this was still there as it always had been. She had forgotten it in the happy weeks she had been away.

Mrs. Palmer raised her lorgnette and inspected the girl coldly. "But what a costume! You look like a stable boy!"

Carey had made the trip in blue-jeans and pink-striped shirt.

"Where is your luggage?"

"Ken is bringing is up."

"You will sleep there," said Mrs. Palmer, pointing across the huge room to a second large double bed in the other corner.

Carey's heart sank. "Grandma," she said hesitantly, "you know I expect to get up early and ride out to where the horses are. I think I'd better have my own room—" She stopped short. Mrs. Palmer sat down very suddenly in a chair by the window and clutched her heart. She leaned her head back. Her face was contorted.

"Oh, Grandma!" It was the frightened child speaking again. "Is it your heart? Where are your smelling salts?"

Mrs. Palmer's head rolled helplessly from one side to the other but she motioned with her hand toward the bureau and Carey, running across the room, found among the toilet things a bottle of smelling salts. She held it to her grand mother's nose, supporting her head with the other hand. It began to seem very natural. The visit at the Goose Bar Ranch was like a remembered dream.

"There, that's better," Mrs. Palmer pushed her away, drew a deep breath, and sat up straight. "You were saying you wanted to have a room to yourself? Very well, then. Perhaps your uncle can find a woman from the village to sleep in here with me. The doctor says I must not be alone at night in a strange place."

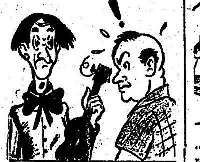
NO WASTED MOTION



Hour after hour the would-be violinist would bow on one string, always holding his finger in the same place. His neighbor endured it as long as he could and when his shattered nerves began to give way, he called on the obnoxious self-styled fiddler.

"I notice when other people play the violin," he commented acidly, "they utilize four strings, and the players move their fingers about continuously."

The musician halted briefly and his face took on a sage look. "Ah, yes," he replied, "it's true that other musicians use all four strings and move their fingers over them constantly. But that's because they are looking for a certain place. You see, I've found it."

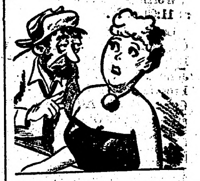
"Has James changed much in the years he has been away?"

"No, but he thinks he has. He keeps talking about what a fool he used to be."

BURST THE BAUBLE



A society lady who loved to go "slumming" dropped into a Bowery rathskeller one evening sporting a pendant the size of a billiard ball. A bar-fly tapped her on the shoulder and whispered, "If I was you, lady, I'd have that lanced."

Divine Blow

The roof of a certain kirk was in need of repairing, but the leading elder could not be convinced that such was the case. At a meeting convened to consider the matter a lump of plaster descended on this elder's head. When he had recovered from the shock he rose and said:

"I am now convinced that the roof must be redone immediately. In fact I'll give five pounds myself!"

Upon which the minister closed his eyes and prayed fervently:

"Oh, Lord, hit him again!"

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U. N. Forces Surprise Communists With Amphibious Attack at Inchon; Ministers Plan European Defenses

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Robert Schuman of France, Dean Acheson of the U. S., and Ernest Bevin, of Great Britain (left to right), open the Big Three foreign ministers conference at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York. Main topic of conversation was the defense of Europe against Communist Aggression.

KOREA:

Now the Offensive

With unexpected and dramatic suddenness the war in Korea turned from the defensive to the offensive.

It was sudden in that the American people were surprised that United Nations forces could be mustered to launch an offensive. And it was dramatic in its conception and execution by Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

From June 25, when the Communist struck with surprising force and generalship, the people of America watched one continual withdrawal. They heard of one Communist advance after another and the fall of such cities as Seoul, Suwan, Kumsan and Taejon. Further and further the Communists advanced until U.N. forces held a beachhead in the southeast corner of Korea that offered little or no room for further retreat and little possibilities for an offensive.

And then in one stroke General MacArthur launched an invasion of Korea over 100 miles behind the Communist lines at Inchon. Other forces landed at Yongdok and at points on the east coast.

The main invading force on the west coast at Inchon had one objective: the capture of Seoul, former capital of South Korea, and cutting the supply routes of the Communists from North Korea. At the same time a general offensive was launched in the south from the U. N. beachhead.

General MacArthur did not try to hide his eventual hopes for the operation. He wanted to cut Korea just below the 38th parallel and thus have the Communists armies between two hammers that would slowly but surely beat them to pieces and destroy them.

The initial invasion was successful. U. S. marine and army divisions captured Wolmi islands in less than an hour, overran Inchon and advanced on Seoul. Kimpo airfield, the best in Korea, was captured, and American troops stood at the outskirts of Seoul.

The southern offensive progressed slowly against stubborn Communist rear guard action. There were indications, however, that Communist defenses were crumbling.

SPYING:

Slack Admits Guilt

Alfred Dean Slack, a former chemist at a Syracuse, N.Y., plant, admitted in federal court at Greenville, Tenn., he was guilty of wartime spying for Soviet Russia.

Slack said he supplied Russian agents with a sample of RDX, a high explosive, and the formula for its manufacture.

U. S. attorney James M. Meek told the court there were "extenuating circumstances" in Slack's favor and recommended a 10-year prison sentence.

Meek told the court how Harry Gold, a Philadelphia biochemist now awaiting trial on espionage charges, made contact with Slack and asked him to obtain details of the manufacture of RDX.

Slack reportedly refused three times to give Gold the information, but when threatened with exposure as a "Soviet spy" obtained a sample of the explosive and the formula, and turned them over to Gold.

JAPAN:

Ready for Treaty

Since the end of the shooting war progress toward a Japanese peace treaty has been blocked because the big powers were divided over what the treaty should be and the procedure for drafting it.

Now, however, the United States has announced it is ready for a treaty and the state department representative John Foster Dulles instructed to begin "informal discussions."

Headliners

"That's a good sight for my old eyes," Gen. Douglas MacArthur said as he inspected six Red tanks, still smoking, where they had been knocked out near Seoul.

"If we lose, we lose forever," Bernard Baruch warned in his latest statement to the American people that all-out war must be waged by the U.S. to win in Korea.

"You see, kids, I happened to be caught in two wars inside 10 years, and the reason I am where I am today is because I am fighting for what I think is right," Pfc. John J. McCormick, 28, wrote in a letter to his two daughters. The letter was received three days after a telegram that informed Mrs. McCormick that her husband had been killed in Korea.

"If American warmongers force a war on humanity it will be their last war. The hate of honest and patient people will explode with a strength greater than any hydrogen bomb," shouted Soviet Marshal Semyon Bagdanow in a speech to bolster Russian morale.

BIG THREE:

Not in Accord

Diplomatic sources noted with concern a break, although not considered too serious, in the relations of the Big Three foreign ministers in their first series of New York meetings.

Dean Acheson, representing the United States, Robert Schuman of France, and Ernest Bevin of Great Britain were not in accord on the U. S. proposal to rearm western Germany. That was the major source of disagreement.

The United States, through Acheson, had urged the 12-nation North Atlantic council to reach agreement in principle that western German forces should become part of the projected western European army.

The U. S. idea was that German troop units would be included in the western European army. France, however, indicated that she wanted to go slow and easy on the question.

The gist of the French attitude seemed to be that it was premature to agree immediately on the principle of eventual German rearmament. That attitude was understandable in that France had not forgotten, or is likely to forget, World War I or World War II, sparked by German aggression.

Observers said that there was a possibility that the foreign ministers might come to some sort of agreement in principle among themselves, though it might not be announced publicly.

The ministers discussed a broad range of urgent problems. A communique issued by the three said they were fully agreed that the most urgent problem was that of strengthening the defenses of the free world both in Europe and in Asia and were equally agreed that immediate effective steps must be taken to that end.

That, perhaps, was a true indication of the atmosphere in which the ministers worked. It was not a question of what had to be done, but the best way to accomplish it.

Follow Through

A second offensive against communism began shortly after the invasion of North Korea with the Voice of America beaming broadcasts to the far east describing the exploit.

Factual reports of the daring maneuvers topped all broadcasts to the far east and near east and shared first attention with the foreign ministers meeting in broadcasts to Europe.

Investigate Flowering

The reason why plants flower may be the next secret of nature to be cracked.

Dr. R. Milton Carleton reports that scientists at the great Beltsville station of the department of agriculture have discovered a blue pigment which is closely linked to the flowering of plants. It seems to act as a starter to affect flowering, and scientists think that the same process controls such things as bulbing of onions, formation of potato tubers and lengthening of the stems of grasses.

HOW TO LAY DOWN THE LAW quietly

Heaven help us if the day comes when Americans can't let off steam about the way the country is being run. Freedom will be only a memory then.

The trouble today is that altogether too much "steam" goes to waste when it should be helping to run the machinery.

Talking over the issues with our friends and neighbors is good. Let's all do more of that.

Thinking them through is still better, because our ideas on national affairs should be our own — not just something that someone else has handed to us.

But neither of these means anything unless we convey our ideas to our representatives. They write the laws as they think we want them. And the best way to let them know what we want is by quietly writing them a letter or a postcard whenever we have anything to say.

That doesn't mean joining in the numerous campaigns to bombard Congressmen with appeals to favor certain groups. On the contrary, it means writing them your honest convictions as an American acting in the interests of America.

Will your Senators and Representatives sit up and take notice of the letters and cards you write? You bet they will! And the time and few cents postage you spend will bring you and your family dividends that can't be measured in money.

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of Minnesota

J. A. A. Burnquist
Attorney General
State Capitol
St. Paul, Minn.

June 2, 1950

Honorable Mike Holm
Secretary of State
State Capitol
St. Paul, Minnesota

Dear Sir:

Pursuant to Minnesota Statutes 1949, Section 3.21, there is transmitted to you herewith, in accordance with the requirements of said statutory provision, a statement of the purpose and effect of the proposed amendment to Article IX, Section 1 of the constitution of the State of Minnesota. The proposed amendment is to be submitted at the November 7, 1950, general election. This amendment was enacted by Laws 1949, Chapter 643.

This proposed amendment would add to Section 1 of Article IX of the constitution of the State of Minnesota an entire new section to be known as Section 1B, which new section would read as follows:

"Notwithstanding the provisions of Section 1A of Article 9 of the constitution, a portion of the proceeds of the occupation tax on the valuation of all ores mined or produced to be paid by every person, co-partnership, company, joint stock company, corporation, or association however or for whatever purpose organized, engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state, equal to the proceeds of a tax of one per cent on such valuation levied in the manner provided by law, shall be paid into the veterans compensation fund before the remaining funds derived from the occupation tax are apportioned as provided by Section 1A of Article 9 of the constitution.

"This amendment when approved by the people and proclaimed, all as provided by law, shall be effective as of the first day of January, 1949. In the event that the provisions of the preceding sentence shall be held to contravene the constitution of the United States of America, the remaining provisions of this section shall stand as valid and continue in full force and effect.

"This section of the constitution shall expire on December 31, 1958, except as to the proceeds of the occupation taxes theretofore levied and thereafter collected."

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to authorize, in order to help pay for the veterans adjusted compensation, the payment into the veterans compensation fund of a part of the occupation tax paid to the state by persons engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state. The amount of the part which it is proposed shall be paid into the veterans compensation fund shall be equal to the proceeds of an occupation tax of one per cent of the valuation as ascertained according to law of the ores mined or produced.

The effect of the amendment is to make available for payment of the veterans adjusted compensation paid to veterans of World War II the entire proceeds of an additional one per cent occupation tax paid pursuant to Laws 1949, Chapter 642, by persons engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state instead of one-half of the proceeds of the additional one per cent occupation tax which is now available for this purpose.

Very truly yours,
JAAB:mm J. A. A. BURNQUIST,
Attorney General

June 6, 1950

Honorable Mike Holm
Secretary of State
CAPITOL

Dear Mr. Holm:

Pursuant to Minnesota Statutes 1949, § 3.21, there is transmitted to you herewith, in accordance with the requirements of said statutory provision, a statement of the purpose and effect of the amendment proposed by L. 1949, c. 746.

The proposed amendment relates to the repeal of Article IV, Section 32 (b), of the Constitution of the State of Minnesota and the modification of Article VIII, Section 2, thereof, so as to provide the manner of the "disposition of the principal and interest from the net proceeds of the use, sale, or other disposition of all (state) lands."

The four present state funds involved in the consideration of the proposed amendment are known as the internal improvement fund, the school fund, the university fund, and the swamp land fund. Provision for the creation of an additional fund, to be known generally as the forestry revolving fund, is contained in the proposed amendment.

The internal improvement fund is now governed by the provisions of Article IV, Section 32 (b), of the Constitution of the State of Minnesota. This section, 32 (b), which would be repealed if the proposed amendment is adopted, reads as follows:

"All lands donated to the State of Minnesota for the purpose of internal improvement, under the eighth section of the act of Congress, approved September fourth, eighteen hundred and forty-one, being 'An act to appropriate the proceeds of the sale of the public lands, and to grant pre-emption rights,' shall be appraised and sold, in the same manner and by the same officers, and the minimum price shall be the same as is provided by law for the appraisement and sale of the school lands, under the provisions of title one (1), chapter thirty-eight, of the General Statutes, except the modifications hereinafter mentioned. All moneys derived from the sales of said lands shall be invested in the bonds of the United States, or of the State of Minnesota issued since 1860; and the moneys so invested shall constitute the Internal Improvement Land Fund of the State. All moneys received by the county treasurer under the provisions of title one (1), chapter thirty-eight (38), aforesaid, derived from the sale of internal improvement lands, shall be held at all times subject to the order and direction of the state treasurer, for the benefit of the fund to which it belongs; and on the fifteenth day of June in each year, and at such other times as he may be requested so to do by the state treasurer, he shall pay over to the said state treasurer all moneys received on account of such fund.

"The bonds purchased in accordance with this amendment shall be transferable only upon the order of the governor, and on each bond shall be written 'Minnesota Internal Improvement Land Fund of the State, transferable only on the order of the governor.'

"The principal sum from all sales of internal improvement lands shall not be reduced by any charges or costs of officers, by fees, or by any other means whatever; and section fifty (50), of title one (1) chapter thirty-eight (38), of the General Statutes, shall not be applicable to the provisions of this amendment, and wherever the words 'school lands' are used in said title, it shall read as applicable to this amendment, 'Internal Improvement Lands.'

"The moneys belonging to the Internal Improvement Land Fund shall not be appropriated for any purpose whatever until the enactment for that purpose shall have been approved by a majority of the electors of the State voting at the annual general election following the passage of the act.

"The force of this amendment shall be to authorize the sale of the internal improvement lands, without further legislative enactment."

The present Article VIII, Section 2, of the Constitution relates to school land funds and swamp land funds. It provides:

"The proceeds of such lands as are or hereafter may be granted by the United States for the use of schools within each township of this State shall remain a perpetual school fund to the State; and not more than one-third (1/3) of said lands may be sold in two (2) years, one-third (1/3) in five (5) years, and one-third (1/3) in ten (10) years; but the lands of the greatest valuation shall be sold first; provided, that no portion of said lands shall be sold otherwise than at public sale. The principal of all funds arising from sales or other disposition of lands or other property, granted or entrusted to this State in each township for educational purposes, shall forever be preserved inviolate and undiminished; and the income arising from the lease or sale of said school land shall be distributed to the different townships throughout the State, in proportion to the number of scholars in each township, between the ages of five and twenty-one years, and shall be faithfully applied to the specific objects of the original grants or appropriations.

"A revolving fund of not over two hundred fifty thousand dollars ($250,000) may be set apart from the fund derived from the sale of school and swamp lands, to be used in constructing roads, ditches and fire breaks in, through and around unsold school and swamp lands and in clearing such lands, such fund to be replenished as long as needed from the enhanced value realized from the sale of such lands so benefited.

"Suitable laws shall be enacted by the legislature for the safe investment of the principal of all funds which have heretofore arisen or which may hereafter arise from the sale or other disposition of such lands, or the income from such lands accruing in any way before the sale or disposition thereof, in interest-bearing bonds of the United States, or of the State of Minnesota, issued after the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty (1860), or of such other state as the legislature may, by law, from time to time direct.

"All swamp lands now held by the State, or that may hereafter accrue to the State, shall be appraised and sold in the same manner and by the same officers, and the minimum price shall be the same less one-third (1/3), as is provided by law for the appraisement and sale of the school lands under the provisions of title one (1) of chapter thirty-eight (38) of the General Statutes. The principal of all funds derived from sales of swamp lands, as aforesaid, shall forever be preserved inviolate and undiminished. One-half (1/2) of the proceeds of said principal shall be appropriated to the common school fund of the State. The remaining one-half (1/2) shall be appropriated to the educational and charitable institutions of the State in the relative ratio of cost to support said institutions."

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to eliminate the present above referred to revolving fund provided for in said Article VIII, Section 2; to remove the present restrictions which would require entire proceeds of the sale of state trust lands to remain perpetual trust funds; to authorize the deduction of a reasonable cost of administration, conservation, and development from the proceeds of the use, sale, or other disposition of lands and provide that such proceeds less such deduction shall constitute "net proceeds"; to set aside as perpetual trust funds 75% of such net proceeds; to establish a new revolving fund to be known as the forestry revolving fund by paying into that fund 25% of such net proceeds; and to permit the cost of administration of the income from the principal to be deducted before the distribution of such income.

(1) Deductions from principal of reasonable cost of administration, conservation and development, and from income from principal, of cost of administration would be authorized.

(2) Seventy-five per cent of the net proceeds from the sale or other disposition of lands belonging to the four funds referred to, would remain as perpetual trust funds. The other twenty-five per cent of such net proceeds would be paid into a newly created forestry revolving fund. The principal therein and the interest therefrom would be used to promote a forestry management and production program and to rehabilitate cut-over timber areas in such manner as the legislature may provide.

(3) The principal of each of the four funds hereinbefore referred to could be invested in bonds of the United States, the State of Minnesota and its political subdivisions, and bonds of other states as may be provided by law.

(4) The income from investment of the principal in the funds hereinbefore referred to, after deducting the cost of administration would be apportioned as follows: From the school fund, to the public schools; from the university fund, to the University of Minnesota; from the swamp land fund, one-half to the public schools and one-half to the charitable and educational institutions of the state; and, from the internal improvement fund, as provided by law.

Very truly yours,
JAAB-sm J. A. A. BURNQUIST,
Attorney General

June 2, 1950

Honorable Mike Holm
Secretary of State
State Capitol
St. Paul, Minnesota

Dear Sir:

Pursuant to Minnesota Statutes 1949, Section 3.21, there is transmitted to you herewith, in accordance with the requirements of said statutory provision, a statement of the purpose and effect of the proposed amendment to Article IX, § 5 of the constitution of the State of Minnesota. The proposed amendment is to be submitted at the November 7, 1950, general election. This amendment was enacted by Laws 1949, Chapter 747.

In Article IX, Section 5 of the Minnesota constitution there is included a provision relating to the distribution of the proceeds of an excise tax on petroleum products which reads as follows:

"* * * and shall place two-thirds of the proceeds of such tax in the Trunk Highway Fund provided for in Section 2 of said Article 16, and one-third thereof in the State Road and Bridge Fund, and further except in cases where grants of land or other property shall have been made to the State, especially dedicated by the grant to specific purposes, and in such cases the state shall devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge or appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion."

The adoption of that amendment proposed under Laws 1949, Chapter 747, would change the above quoted provision to read as follows:

"* * * and shall place one-half of the proceeds of such tax in the Trunk Highway Fund provided for in Section 2 of said Article 16, apportion for road and street purposes on the basis of population 6% thereof to cities of over 100,000 population, according to the latest available federal census, and 44% thereof to the State Road and Bridge Fund, and further, except in cases where grants of land or other property shall have been made to the State, especially dedicated by the grant to specific purposes, and in such cases the state shall devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge or appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion."

The purpose of the amendment is to change the method of distribution of the proceeds of the excise tax as now provided by Article IX, Section 5 of the state constitution. The effect would be that after the adoption of the amendment instead of the present distribution of two-thirds of the tax to the Trunk Highway Fund and one-third to the State Road and Bridge Fund, the distribution would be made in the following manner:

(1) One-half to the Trunk Highway Fund.

(2) 6% would be apportioned for road and street purposes on the basis of population to cities of over 100,000 population according to the latest federal census figures.

(3) The remaining 44% would be placed in the State Road and Bridge Fund.

Mink Season Dates Moved Up To Nov. 1 Thru Dec. 31

The 1950 mink season will extend from November 1 to December 31 inclusive. In an order signed September 5th, Commissioner Chester S. Wilson has amended the previous order which opened the season December 1 to January 31, 1951, inclusive.

The December opening had been set as a result of reports that some fur buyers are contending that mink were not prime in November and that trappers would not receive top prices for their catch and that if the season opened with the muskrat season, much of the accidental or illegal catch of muskrats would be prevented.

Further investigation revealed that for the most part fur buyers and trappers alike report that mink are prime in November and that the number of muskrats accidentally taken is incidental when compared to the advantage of trapping mink in November.

Trappers are also of the opinion that female mink will be conserved by closing the season on December 31st.

Restrictions on the taking of mink remain the same as in the previous order and they cannot be taken with use of dogs or by digging; nor can traps be set in, molest, injury or destroy any muskrat house, beaver house, beaver dam, burrow, den or other abiding place of beaver or muskrat.

HOARDING OF FUEL OIL GOOD IDEA

Hoarding of one commodity in the present international crisis is not only warranted but highly desirable, according to J. W. Clark, state fuel conservator. The combination of military demands upon petroleum, together with the accelerating pace with which railroads and homes, new and old, are b coming dependent upon oil, requires the immediate storage of fuel oil by all consumers.

There is plenty of oil now available both in the producing areas and in the local suppliers' tanks and depots, according to Conservator Clark. As yet, the householder is waiting for the first cold snap before ordering a "fill-up." This is causing river barges to lie idle because there is no place where they can pump their load when they get to this end of the line.

The demand for fuel oil appears to be increasing beyond estimates. A few months ago, it was thought the new fuel oil pipe line terminating at New Brighton, to gether with the increased storage facilities along the river and in dealers' yards all out through the state, would remove all fears of shortage in this area for years to come. If the heating season is relatively mild and the military requirements for jet planes and butadiene rubber—now rapidly mounting—do not become excessive, there may again be an ample supply. Because there is no assurance of either an easy winter or limited military demands, the wise householder is urged to play safe. He should get as much of his winter's fuel as close to his furnace as he can—and NOW!

Social Security Urges Check Up On

Some people age 65 or over, were told they did not have enough periods of work in social security covered jobs to be entitled to payments. Many of these people may now be eligible for payments upon filing an application, according to Walter D. Kistler, Manager of the Grand Forks office.

Under the amended law, a worker now 65, needs only six quarters of covered employment to his credit, secured at any time since 1936, to be eligible for payments. Mr. Kistler urges those pepole to come to the City Auditorium in Hallock starting at 9:30 a. m. on October 12 to file claims under the new social security law.

HOW SOON IS YOUR NEAREST DOCTOR?

When a man needs medical attention his family doesn't ask the doctor, "How far away are you?" but "How fast can you get here?"

Thanks to telephones, automobiles, and modern highways, the doctor can answer an emergency call about five times as fast as he could 50 years ago. And once on the job, says LIFE magazine, "the country doctor in 1950 is a thousand times more effective than a king's physician in 1900."

Because the increase in number of doctors is slightly less than the increase in America's population, a few self-seeking individuals are crying that this is endangering our citizens' health. Actually, that's like saying the nation is about to starve to death because the percentage of farm workers has decreased by two-thirds since 1900.

Relatively few U. S. localities have a serious doctor shortage and new doctors are gradually filling these gaps. When some federal officials say that 20,000 more doctors are needed they do not mean they are needed for reasons of health. They mean they will be needed to offset the wasteful and inefficient methods which are certain to result from government-controlled compulsory medical care.

Proposals for this type of medical care are a real danger to the nation's excellent health record today, and every thinking American should be aware of this.

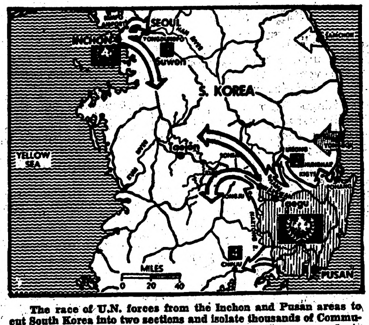
Congress Overrides Truman Veto Of Tough Communist Control Bill; United Nations Forces Take Seoul

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



The race of U.N. forces from the Inchon and Pusan areas to cut South Korea into two sections and isolate thousands of Communist troops in the south went forward at such a clip correspondents were unable to keep up with the advance. The two spearheads made a junction north of Taejon, trapping about 100,000 Communist troops in southwestern Korea. Arrows indicate the directions the converging advances took.

KOREA:

Three Bloody Months

After three bloody months the war in Korea appeared near the end with the capture of Seoul, 500-year-old Korean capital, and the junction of U. N. troops from the Inchon and Pusan beachheads.

The war seemed to be in the last of three stages. The first began with the invasion of Communists troops and their capture of Seoul and the general retreat of American and South Korean troops to the narrow beachhead at Pusan.

The second was that period when U. N. forces maintained their beachhead while troops and weapons for an offensive were being built up in Japan and near Pusan.

The third and final stage began with the Inchon invasion and a general attack from the north and south to isolate the invaders below the 38th parallel and thus destroy them.

The breakout from the Pusan beachhead came suddenly and in force. Troops landed at Inchon captured Seoul and headed south. The two forces were within a few miles of each other at last reports and thousands of Communists were doomed to isolation and destruction in the final phase of stage three.

Military commanders were quick to report that bloody fighting would go on for some time as mopping up operations continued. They expected guerilla warfare in the mountains for a long time since many Communist units were expected to resist to the death.

One important question remained unanswered. Will U.N. troops cross the 38th parallel into North Korea?

NOBEL PRIZE:

To American Negro

Dr. Ralph Bunche, U.N. mediator who brought an end to conflict in the Holy Land, was awarded the Nobel peace prize for 1950.

Dr. Bunche, grandson of an American Negro slave, is the first of his race to receive the peace prize. It will be presented to him December 10. He will receive $23,000 and a gold medal.

A member of the U.S. state department, Dr. Bunche was loaned to the United Nations in 1946. He succeeded Count Folke Bernadotte of Sweden as the U.N. mediator in Palestine after Bernadotte was assassinated in 1948, effected an armistice and ended the bitter clash between Jews and Arabs.

When informed of the award, he paid tribute to his predecessor for laying the essential foundations of the Palestine agreements.

"At this moment, I cannot forget that Count Bernadotte and 10 other members of our team gave their lives in the effort to restore peace to Palestine," he said.

Dr. Bunche is the eleventh American to win the peace prize. Others were President Theodore Roosevelt, Elihu Root, Woodrow Wilson, Charles G. Dawes, Frank B. Kellog, Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, Jane Addams, Cordell Hull, John R. Mott, and Emily G. Balch.

BUSINESS:

Buoyant Economy

The business boom flourished on all fronts during September, supported by a buoyant civilian economy and increased spending for the rearmament program.

Virtually every one of the standard measuring devices that tell the state of business at any given time showed gains, and in some instances new peaks for recent years. Where there were no advances, indicators held steady.

Headliners

"Let us not, in cowering and foolish fear, throw away the ideals which are the fundamental basis for our free society," President Truman said in his 5,500-word message roundly denouncing the Communist control bill.

"I don't think there is going to be any war, but I think there will be many occasions of great anxiety until the East-West impasse is broken," Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, winner of the Nobel peace prize, said in an interview.

"We have a word in Russian which you should know. It is 'nichevo'. It means 'don't worry—things will turn out all right'," Jacob Malik told delegates while chatting with western delegates in the security council lounge. Did he mean all right for the Russians or for world peace? Diplomats wondered.

CONGRESS:

Home for Elections

The 81st congress which will be praised and condemned, according to individual political views, came to a dramatic pause with a filibuster and a vote to override a presidential veto. The congress will reconvene November 27.

The filibuster was unique in that both supporters and opponents of the tough Communist control bill, the issue in question, participated in it.

First, six senators teamed up to filibuster for 19½ hours against the bill in the hope that popular opinion and last-minute presidential appeals might tip the scales in the administration's favor.

Then, when the six finally gave up, supporters of the bill continued to talk until several advocates, including Sen. Robert Taft of Ohio could arrive for the final vote.

Among its sweeping provision, the bill requires the registration of Communists and Communist-front organizations, authorizes the mass roundup of suspected subversives in time of war or national emergency and provides stiffer penalties for espionage and sabotage.

President Truman said he vetoed the measure because:

(1) Aid potential enemies by requiring publication of a complete list of defense plants.

(2) Require the justice department and the FBI to waste "immense amounts of time and energy attempting to carry out its unworkable registration provisions."

(3) Deprive the U.S. of "great assistance of many aliens in intelligence matters."

(4) Antagonize friendly governments.

(5) Put the U.S. in the "thought control" business by regulating subversive literature and propaganda.

(6) Make it easier, instead of harder, for subversive aliens to become naturalized American citizens.

(7) Give federal officials vast powers to harass citizens in the exercise of their right of free speech.

Atlantic Hop

For the first time in history a single-engine jet fighter plane, refueled as it flew, crossed the Atlantic from England to the United States.

Piloted by Col. David C. Schilling, the F-84 Thunderjet averaged 330 miles an hour in the 3,300 mile hop. A second plane failed to complete the distance when it ran out of fuel. The pilot, Lt. Col. William Ritchie, bailed out safely.

Smoother Performance—Double Life and Greater Gas Savings*

GREEN GRASS OF WYOMING

By Mary O'Hara

Thunderhead, a mare-stealing white stallion, owned by Ken McLaughlin, has been banished to the Wyoming hills. He has added a valuable filly, Crown Jewel, to his herd after freeing her from a shipping crate which fell off a train. Rob, Ken's dad, and Beaver Greenway, the filly's owner, have started a search for the filly and have arrived in the town of Westgate three miles from where Thunderhead and his herd have been discovered. Carey Marsh, Greenway's niece and Ken's "sweetheart," is along. Carey wants to go with searchers but her grandmother, Mrs. Palmer, is opposed to the idea of her going on the hazardous trip.

CHAPTER XVII

"Oh, Grandma! Of course I'll sleep with you. I had—sort of forgotten. I didn't realize you had been having heart spells."

There were steps in the hall. With surprising agility Mrs. Palmer jumped up and went to the door, opened it and looked out. It was the hotel clerk and Ken, each carrying one of Carey's big suitcases. The clerk was unlocking the door of the room across the hall.

Ken dropped the suitcase he was carrying and turned to greet Mrs. Palmer. He was untidy and sweaty but at sight of his long sensitive face and the sweetness of his expression Carey had a sudden surge of the heart. It was the feeling a prisoner might have at sight of one come to set him free.

"Why, hello, Mrs. Palmer," he said.

She ignored his outstretched hand. "How do you do, Kenneth. Will you please put Carey's luggage in here."

"I thought she was going to have a room to herself? She said—"

"She will sleep in here, Kenneth." She swept back into the room. Ken glanced at the clerk. They picked up the cases and followed her in. "Put that big one there; the other over here." She pointed to two chairs.

"I'm going to the stables to see to the horses. Would you like to come with me, Carey?"

"Carey will not be going out again this evening, Kenneth," said Mrs. Palmer, so smoothly, with such expert finality that Ken, who had intended to put up a fight for Carey, found himself standing outside the closed door, marveling at how he had got there. What was it in that woman that moved other people around as if they were chessmen?

A dignified gentleman who spoke with a southern accent came up and introduced himself as Ashley Gildersleeve, owner of the weekly paper of the town of Steamboat Springs. He explained that a valuable mare belonging to him named Lady Godiva had disappeared the year previous, that there was evidence that Thunderhead had been in the neighborhood and the general opinion was that the white stallion had stolen her. Hearing that a search for him was on, he had come down to be present at the round-up.

Meanwhile Ken and Carey were wondering down the street.

"Gosh. Carey, it isn't the way it was at home—that you and I could go off for a ride with each other whenever we wanted to," said Ken almost in desperation.

"I know, Ken. Everything has changed." Carey drew a deep sigh. "But that wasn't really my life, with you and your family. That was your life. My life is quite different. A person has to go back to their own life."

Ken almost choked on the words he wanted to say—that her life and his life ought to be together. They came to a little bridge and paused, leaning over the railing, looking down at the shallow creek.

"Do you—do you think I'm very—er—possessive, Carey?"

"About what, Ken? Thunderhead? But he's yours—why shouldn't you be?"

"I—I didn't mean Thunderhead." Ken's breath suddenly left him and with it his courage. "Now, your grandmother, Carey—she's possessive about you, too—but in the wrong way!"

"About me too!"

"Oh—I—" He could not go on. Bravely he looked into her face, then burst out. "Carey, do you—l-l-like me?"

"Why, of course! You know I do!"

"Oh, yes, I know that, but well I mean for instance, as well as you like Howard?"

"Oh, much better. Howard is superficial."

"Well, what am I?"

"You are mature."

Ken Proud as Carey Says He's 'Mature'

Ken savored this. Mature The word brought him over the edge of boyhood. It was wonderful—mature. Then he grew doubtful. She had said it so seriously. She was always so motherly to him that he would hardly have been surprised if she had suddenly taken her handkerchief and wiped his nose. He didn't know if this was a good sign or not.

Just as they reached the hotel a tall man in a business suit walked up the front steps and took off his ten gallon hat.

"I'm looking for Captain McLaughlin."

Ken and Carey sat down on the top step.

Rob stood up. "That's my name." They shook hands.

"I'm the Deputy Sheriff," He showed his badge. "My name's Elmer Barrows."

Rob introduced him all around and said, "Take a seat, Sheriff. What's on your mind?"

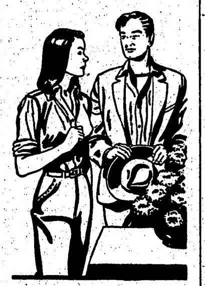
The Sheriff cut himself a plug of tobacco and put it in his mouth. "Well, it's about these horses you're going to take out of the state. I hear that's what you're here for."

"That's right," said Rob. "The black filly belongs to Mr. Greenway here."

"Is she branded, Mr. Greenway? I happen to be the Brand Inspector as well as Deputy."

"No, there's no brand on her."

"You understand I have to be satisfied as to the ownership of these horses before they can be moved. How many head are there?"



"Would you like to come with me, Carey?"

"There's between fifteen and twenty head not counting the colts," said Rob. "Sure, we can prove ownership. Mr. Greenway has papers for his filly, and the groom can identify her. He brought her from England."

"And where do the others come from?"

"All over Wyoming and Colorado," said Rob, grinning. "Wherever the stallion had a mind to steal them. When we've got them corralled and have taken the two we're after I'll leave the rest for you."

"That'd be the best way," said the Sheriff.

Down the street, enveloped in a cloud of dust, came two riders. They were Ross and Tim who had not been able to resist the temptation to show some of the McLaughlin spindle-legs to the town. They pranced along sideways, Ross twirling the end of his rope and greeting all and sundry with jovial yells.

As they got abreast of the hotel, Rob called them to come and meet the Sheriff. The boys dismounted, tied the horses to the hitching pole and, standing below the veranda, leaned on the top rail of the porch and were introduced all around.

"This is Jeff Stevens," said Rob.

"The fellow that Thunderhead stole the mares off of?"

"I'm the guy," boasted Stevens, beginning to enjoy his fame. "I've come here to git mine from that fence-jumpin', mare-stealin', murderin' son-of-a-bi— I beg your pardon, lady, I was goin' to say, that murderin' hellion!"

Sheriff Says Stallion Is at End of Tether

Half the town, it seemed, was gathering around the front veranda of the Grand View Hotel. The Sheriff introduced them.

"This is Charley Gage, President of Stock-Growers and Lumber man's Bank of Westgate."

"Sit down, Mr. Gage."

"You boys down thar, come up here and meet Mr. Greenway who owns the racing stable in Idaho, and Mr. McLaughlin—these boys are our fire brigade—"

The guests of the hotel, transients, traveling salesmen, a few of the townspeople drew their chairs around and joined in.

"It's this stallion of Ken McLaughlin's that's creating all the commotion," said the Sheriff. "He's come to the end of his tether now, and half of these folks you see here is men that have had mares stolen by him."

"Is he yours, sure enough?" asked one of the fire brigade of Ken.

"Yep," said Ken, uncertain as to whether he was a hero or a villain.

"Can you ride him?" demanded Jeff Stevens, slapping his two hands down on his knees and leaning toward Ken.

"Sure I can! I raised him from a baby!"

"Gee whittaker!" marveled Tad Stevens, shaking his head. "Put a saddle and bridle on that devil! Not me!"

Ken was modest. "Thunderhead's easy to ride. I've ridden him bareback ever since his back was strong enough to hold me."

Tim and Ross were corroborating the story of Ken's exploit. There were murmurs of amazement and everyone turned to look at the boy again.

Greenway leaned to Rob. "Did he really do that?"

"Yes," said Rob. "The damndest stunt I ever heard of. He didn't know he was doing anything out of the ordinary. Stuck on for a mile or more, then slid off, came home covered with cuts and bruises."

"Good God!" said Greenway and turned to look at Ken with new respect in his eyes.

"He's a rider," said Rob. "With him on his back I've seen Thunderhead do a half mile in forty-seven seconds. He sails over fences, rocks, roads—cattle guards—nothing stops him."

Greenway was thoughtful, dallying with the idea that if Ken had been such a fine trainer for Thunderhead, he might be the one to get Jewel into form.

The Sheriff turned to Rob. "What you going to do with this fairy-book hoss when you catch him?"

"Let's catch him first," said Rob.

Ken went to bed in an agony about Thunderhead. What would be done to him? Don't think about it . . . just think about having him again . . . standing against that arching neck, feeling those great muscles ripple . . . and to know him his own again . . . to get on that fierce back and be carried through the air . . . like flying or sailing. . . .

A strange feeling ran through his body. It felt like the electric heat that charged the stallion and that, when one rode him, fused them into one.

That night Rob had a talk with Nell over the long distance telephone. They exchanged their news. Rob missed her awfully and told her so. He told her of the horses, so conviently trapped near the headwaters of the Spindle River.

Rob Incensed as Ken Plans Race Riding

"How many mares are there?"

"We can't count exactly, they're in and out of the brush and I don't let anyone get close to them. Don't want to scare them. But there are more than I thought. He's picked up some more. Perhaps twenty."

"Twenty mares! That's a full band!"

"Yep. He's a rustler!"

"Have you talked to Ken about Thunderhead?"

"What about him?"

"About what's to be done with him."

"No."

"Well, what is?"

"Ken's got an idea."

"Oh, Rob!"

"Yeah! He wants to race him again!"

"Rob!"

"You might know."

"What do you tell him?"

"I don't even talk to him."

"You wouldn't consider it, would you?"

"Certainly not! Keep him out of school again?"

"He's been doing pretty well in school."

"Nell, don't you back him up in this!"

"No, Rob, I think you're absolutely right."

Rob fumed. "Racing! It's like a drug. It gets into the blood. Once you're bitten by the racing bug there's no hope for you."

"Well, what are you going to do with Thunderhead?"

"You know as well as I."

"What?"

"Well, I can't bring him home."

"Of course not"

"And he has to be kept off the range."

"Certainly."

Nell was silent. The silence dragged on. "Hello!" said Rob. "Are you there, Nell?"

"Yes, darling, I'm here. I was just thinking." She gave a little groan. "Of course Ken will be broken hearted but I think you're right. Go on and geld him."

"Yep."

There was another long silence. Then Rob said, "There's a good veterinarian in town. I'll have him do it as soon as we get Thunderhead into the corral. I'll not take the chance of his getting away again. This way, we can have him at the ranch, he will be a magnificent saddle horse for Ken."

"Yes." Nell heaved a sigh. "It should really have been done long ago. Are you going to tell Ken?"

"Tell him nothin'," said Rob gruffly. "When he sees it done, he'll know it."

There was another long silence from Nell, then a sigh. "Yes," she said.

Household Hints

To keep the children from dirtying various parts of a roller towel before the parts in between are used, pin the back and front of the towel together near the top with a safety pin. Since the towel won't roll then, they'll have to wipe their hands on the front part. When that's dirty, take out the pin, roll the back part to the front and put the pin in again.

The better portions of otherwise worn out bedsheets can be cut up and used as dish towels, especially if you run an embroidered hem around the edges.

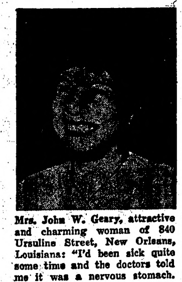
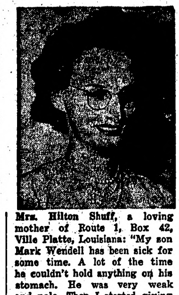
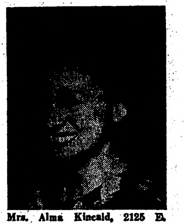
ABSOLUTE PROOF HADACOL HELPS FOLKS SUFFERING STOMACH DISTURBANCES
when due to lack of Vitamins B_1, B_2, Iron and Niacin in the system!



Mrs. John W. Geary, attractive and charming woman of 840 Ursuline Street, New Orleans, Louisiana: "I'd been sick quite some time and the doctors told me it was a nervous stomach. I couldn't eat regularly and lots of times I was unable to hold the food on my stomach. Then I heard about HADACOL. After the first few bottles I could tell a definite improvement. Now my stomach doesn't trouble me at all. I eat anything I want, and my nerves are fine." (Give HADACOL a chance to help you.)



Mrs. Hilton Shuff, a loving mother of Route 1, Box 42, Ville Platte, Louisiana: "My son Mark Wendell has been sick for some time. A lot of the time he couldn't hold anything on his stomach. He was very weak and pale. Then I started giving him HADACOL, and he improved in just a short time. He's gained weight and has more energy than a dozen wild Indians." (HADACOL is great for puny, nervous kiddies with easily upset stomachs due to lack of important Vitamins B_1, B_2, Iron and Niacin.



Mrs. Alma Kincaid, 2125 E. Adelaide, St. Louis, Missouri "I've been taking HADACOL for over a year. Before taking it, I had stomach distress for some time. Nothing seemed to help me. Then I took my husband's advice and took HADACOL. A good friend of his told him of the wonderful results he had from HADACOL. Now that I'm taking HADACAL I eat anything. I recommend HADACOL to all my friends." (A big improvement is often noticed within a few days.)

WHY CONTINUE TO DOUBT

These are just a few of thousands upon thousands of letters that constantly pour in telling of the wonderful results the great new HADACOL is giving. It's only a very foolish person who would continue to 'doubt' HADACOL'S effectiveness and continue to suffer in view of such overwhelming evidence.

Relieves the Cause of Stomach Distress Due to Such Deficiencies

So if you are suffering from stomach disturbance (gas pains, indigestion, heartburn), if the food you eat disagrees with you because your system is lacking Vitamins B_1, B_2, Iron and Niacin—don't delay—start taking HADACOL today. HADACOL is not a quick-acting antiacid which gives symptomatic relief—instead, HADACOL actually relieves the REAL CAUSE of such stomach misery due to such deficiencies. And continued use helps prevent such painful distress from coming back.

Hundreds of Doctors Recommend It

Hundreds upon hundreds of doctors recommend HADACOL. It not only supplies weak, deficient systems with extra quantities of important Vitamins B_1, B_2, Iron and Niacin but also beneficial amounts of precious Calcium, Phosphorus and Manganese—elements so vital to help maintain glorious health and guard against such deficiency ailments. And so inexpensive. Costs only a small amount a day. Trial-size bottle, $1.25. Large family or hospital size, $3.50.

If your druggist does not have HADACOL, order direct from The LeBlanc Corporation, Lafayette, Louisiana. Send no money. Just your name and address on a penny post card. Pay postman. Ever moved a lake?

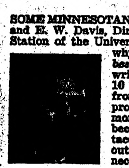
SOME MINNESOTANS HAVE DONE JUST THAT... and E. W. Davis, Director of the Mines Experiment Station of the University of Minnesota, can tell you why. "To mine iron ore in even the best of the open-pit mines," he writes, "it is necessary to clean from 10 to 50 feet of sand and gravel from the surface before starting production. However, mining is still more difficult today in many pits, because the surface may be hard taconite rock which must be blasted out and hauled out, or it may be necessary to divert streams or even pump out whole lakes to get to the ore."



Davis

THIS IS ONE WAY of saying that open-pit mining is a far cry from what it used to be. It isn't cheap and it isn't simple any more.

To say it another way, open-pit mining now calls for—

- —Pumping out enormous quantities of surface and underground water (up to 8 tons of water to get 1 ton of ore);
- —Peeling off up to 300 feet of sand and boulders before you can root out a ton of ore;
- —Smashing ore in big crushing plants, screening out the waste;
- —Harnessing enormous, costly machinery, like 30-ton diesel trucks, quarter-mile conveyor belts, huge drag lines and power shovels.

It's a tough business. It requires years of development work, and millions of dollars, before any ore is produced. But just over the horizon, there's a far tougher problem: developing Minnesota's taconites.

These can be the "ores of the future." In them lies the only real hope of a full-scale, permanent mining industry for this state. In them also lies true conservation: turning useless material into usable fodder for the blast furnace.

But will these taconites be used to full advantage? That depends upon COSTS. Before the ore producers can put up the necessary millions for great new "ore factories," they must know that costs can be kept low enough. Nobody has to use our ore; other areas have large supplies.

Minnesota people can help assure their own iron mining future by understanding the problems the ore industry is up against. They have everything to gain by insisting that this industry be treated the same as any other manufacturing industry they'd like to encourage.

Why we publish these facts

- We of the iron ore industry want to stay in Minnesota—permanently.
- We want to insure the future of Minnesota's iron ore wealth by investing the millions of dollars needed to hasten development of low-grade and taconite ores.
- We want to help make it possible for the people of Minnesota to enjoy even greater benefits from this expanded industry—both in dollars and jobs—for many generations to come.
- We publish these facts so that no matter who you are, where you live, or what you do for a living, you may rest assured that

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of Minnesota

J. A. A. Burnquist
Attorney General
State Capitol
St. Paul, Minn.

June 2, 1950

Honorable Mike Holm
Secretary of State
State Capitol
St. Paul, Minnesota

Dear Sir:

Pursuant to Minnesota Statutes 1949, Section 3.21, there is transmitted to you herewith, in accordance with the requirements of said statutory provision, a statement of the purpose and effect of the proposed amendment to Article IX, Section 1 of the constitution of the State of Minnesota. The proposed amendment is to be submitted at the November 7, 1950, general election. This amendment was enacted by Laws 1949, Chapter 643.

This proposed amendment would add to Section 1 of Article IX of the constitution of the State of Minnesota an entire new section, to be known as Section 1B, which new section would read as follows:

"Notwithstanding the provisions of Section 1A of Article 9 of the constitution, a portion of the proceeds of the occupation tax on the valuation of all ores mined or produced to be paid by every person, co-partnership, company, joint stock company, corporation, or association however or for whatever purpose organized, engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state, equal to the proceeds of a tax of one per cent on such valuation levied in the manner provided by law, shall be paid into the veterans compensation fund before the remaining funds derived from the occupation tax are apportioned as provided by Section 1A of Article 9 of the constitution.

"This amendment when approved by the people and proclaimed, all as provided by law, shall be effective as of the first day of January, 1949. In the event that the provisions of the preceding sentence shall be held to contravene the constitution of the United States of America, the remaining provisions of this section shall stand as valid and continue in full force and effect.

"This section of the constitution shall expire on December 31, 1958, except as to the proceeds of the occupation taxes theretofore levied and thereafter collected."

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to authorize, in order to help pay for the veterans adjusted compensation, the payment into the veterans compensation fund of a part of the occupation tax paid to the state by persons engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state. The amount of the part which it is proposed shall be paid into the veterans compensation fund shall be equal to the proceeds of an occupation tax of one per cent of the valuation as ascertained according to law of the ores mined or produced.

The effect of the amendment is to make available for payment of the veterans adjusted compensation paid to veterans of World War II the entire proceeds of an additional one per cent occupation tax paid pursuant to Laws 1949, Chapter 642, by persons engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state instead of one-half of the proceeds of the additional one per cent occupation tax which is now available for this purpose.

Very truly yours,
JAAB:mm J. A. A. BURNQUIST,
Attorney General

June 6, 1950

Honorable Mike Holm
Secretary of State
CAPITOL

Dear Mr. Holm:

Pursuant to Minnesota Statutes 1949, § 3.21, there is transmitted to you herewith, in accordance with the requirements of said statutory provision, a statement of the purpose and effect of the amendment proposed by L. 1949, c. 746.

The proposed amendment relates to the repeal of Article IV, Section 32 (b), of the Constitution of the State of Minnesota and the modification of Article VIII, Section 2, thereof, so as to provide the manner of the "disposition of the principal and interest from the net proceeds of the use, sale, or other disposition of all (state) lands."

The four present state funds involved in the consideration of the proposed amendment are known as the internal improvement fund, the school fund, the university fund, and the swamp land fund. Provision for the creation of an additional fund, to be known generally as the forestry revolving fund, is contained in the proposed amendment.

The internal improvement fund is now governed by the provisions of Article IV, Section 32 (b), of the Constitution of the State of Minnesota. This section, 32 (b), which would be repealed if the proposed amendment is adopted, reads as follows:

"All lands donated to the State of Minnesota for the purpose of internal improvement, under the eighth section of the act of Congress, approved September fourth, eighteen hundred and forty-one, being 'An act to appropriate the proceeds of the sale of the public lands, and to grant pre-emption rights,' shall be appraised and sold, in the same manner and by the same officers, and the minimum price shall be the same as is provided by law for the appraisement and sale of the school lands, under the provisions of title one (1), chapter thirty-eight, of the General Statutes, except the modifications hereinafter mentioned. All moneys derived from the sales of said lands shall be invested in the bonds of the United States, or of the State of Minnesota issued since 1860; and the moneys so invested shall constitute the Internal Improvement Land Fund of the State. All moneys received by the county treasurer under the provisions of title one (1), chapter thirty-eight (38), aforesaid, derived from the sale of internal improvement lands, shall be held at all times subject to the order and direction of the state treasurer, for the benefit of the fund to which it belongs; and on the fifteenth day of June in each year, and at such other times as he may be requested so to do by the state treasurer, he shall pay over to the said state treasurer all moneys received on account of such fund.

"The bonds purchased in accordance with this amendment shall be transferable only upon the order of the governor, and on each bond shall be written 'Minnesota Internal Improvement Land Fund of the State, transferable only on the order of the governor.'

"The principal sum from all sales of internal improvement lands shall not be reduced by any charges or costs of officers, by fees, or by any other means whatever; and section fifty (50), of title one (1) chapter thirty-eight (38), of the General Statutes, shall not be applicable to the provisions of this amendment, and wherever the words 'school lands' are used in said title, it shall read as applicable to this amendment, 'Internal Improvement Lands.'

"The moneys belonging to the Internal Improvement Land Fund shall not be appropriated for any purpose whatever until the enactment for that purpose shall have been approved by a majority of the electors of the State voting at the annual general election following the passage of the act.

"The force of this amendment shall be to authorize the sale of the internal improvement lands, without further legislative enactment."

The present Article VIII, Section 2, of the Constitution relates to school land funds and swamp land funds. It provides:

"The proceeds of such lands as are or hereafter may be granted by the United States for the use of schools within each township of this State shall remain a perpetual school fund to the State; and not more than one-third (⅓) of said lands may be sold in two (2) years, one-third (⅓) in five (5) years, and one-third (⅓) in ten (10) years; but the lands of the greatest valuation shall be sold first; provided, that no portion of said lands shall be sold otherwise than at public sale. The principal of all funds arising from sales or other disposition of lands or other property, granted or entrusted to this State in each township for educational purposes, shall forever be preserved inviolate and undiminished; and the income arising from the lease or sale of said school land shall be distributed to the different townships throughout the State, in proportion to the number of scholars in each township, between the ages of five and twenty-one years; and shall be faithfully applied to the specific objects of the original grants or appropriations.

"A revolving fund of not over two hundred fifty thousand dollars ($250,000) may be set apart from the fund derived from the sale of school and swamp lands, to be used in constructing roads, ditches and fire breaks in, through and around unsold school and swamp lands and in clearing such lands, such fund to be replenished as long as needed from the enhanced value realized from the sale of such lands so benefited.

"Suitable laws shall be enacted by the legislature for the safe investment of the principal of all funds which have heretofore arisen or which may hereafter arise from the sale or other disposition of such lands, or the income from such lands accruing in any way before the sale or disposition thereof, in interest-bearing bonds of the United States, or of the State of Minnesota, issued after the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty (1860), or of such other state as the legislature may, by law, from time to time direct.

"All swamp lands now held by the State, or that may hereafter accrue to the State, shall be appraised and sold in the same manner and by the same officers, and the minimum price shall be the same less one-third (⅓), as is provided by law for the appraisement and sale of the school lands under the provisions of title one (1) of chapter thirty-eight (38) of the General Statutes. The principal of all funds derived from sales of swamp lands, as aforesaid, shall forever be preserved inviolate and undiminished. One-half (½) of the proceeds of said principal shall be appropriated to the common school fund of the State. The remaining one-half (½) shall be appropriated to the educational and charitable institutions of the State in the relative ratio of cost to support said institutions."

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to eliminate the present above referred to revolving fund provided for in said Article VIII, Section 2; to remove the present restrictions which would require entire proceeds of the sale of state trust lands to remain perpetual trust funds; to authorize the deduction of a reasonable cost of administration, conservation, and development from the proceeds of the use, sale, or other disposition of lands and provide that such proceeds less such deduction shall constitute "net proceeds"; to set aside as perpetual trust funds 75% of such net proceeds; to establish a new revolving fund to be known as the forestry revolving fund by paying into that fund 25% of such net proceeds; and to permit the cost of administration of the income from the principal to be deducted before the distribution of such income.

(1) Deductions from principal of reasonable cost of administration, conservation and development, and from income from principal, of cost of administration would be authorized.

(2) Seventy-five per cent of the net proceeds from the sale or other disposition of lands belonging to the four funds referred to, would remain as perpetual trust funds. The other twenty-five per cent of such net proceeds would be paid into a newly created forestry revolving fund. The principal therein and the interest therefrom would be used to promote a forestry management and production program and to rehabilitate cut-over timber areas in such manner as the legislature may provide.

(3) The principal of each of the four funds hereinbefore referred to could be invested in bonds of the United States, the State of Minnesota and its political subdivisions, and bonds of other states as may be provided by law.

(4) The income from investment of the principal in the funds hereinbefore referred to, after deducting the cost of administration would be apportioned as follows: From the school fund, to the public schools; from the university fund, to the University of Minnesota; from the swamp land fund, one-half to the public schools and one-half to the charitable and educational institutions of the state; and, from the internal improvement fund, as provided by law.

Dear Sir:

Pursuant to Minnesota Statutes 1949, Section 3.21, there is transmitted to you herewith, in accordance with the requirements of said statutory provision, a statement of the purpose and effect of the proposed amendment to Article IX, § 5 of the constitution of the State of Minnesota. The proposed amendment is to be submitted at the November 7, 1950, general election. This amendment was enacted by Laws 1949, Chapter 747.

In Article IX, Section 5 of the Minnesota constitution there is included a provision relating to the distribution of the proceeds of an excise tax on petroleum products which reads as follows:

"* * * and shall place two-thirds of the proceeds of such tax in the Trunk Highway Fund provided for in Section 2 of said Article 16, and one-third thereof in the State Road and Bridge Fund, and further except in cases where grants of land or other property shall have been made to the State, especially dedicated by the grant to specific purposes, and in such cases the state shall devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge or appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion."

The adoption of that amendment proposed under Laws 1949, Chapter 747, would change the above quoted provision to read as follows:

"* * * and shall place one-half of the proceeds of such tax in the Trunk Highway Fund provided for in Section 2 of said Article 16, apportion for road and street purposes on the basis of population 6% thereof to cities of over 100,000 population, according to the latest available federal census, and 44% thereof to the State Road and Bridge Fund, and further, except in cases where grants of land or other property shall have been made to the State, especially dedicated by the grant to specific purposes, and in such cases the state shall devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge or appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion."

The purpose of the amendment is to change the method of distribution of the proceeds of the excise tax as now provided by Article IX, Section 5 of the state constitution. The effect would be that after the adoption of the amendment instead of the present distribution of two-thirds of the tax to the Trunk Highway Fund and one-third to the State Road and Bridge Fund, the distribution would be made in the following manner:

(1) One-half to the Trunk Highway Fund.

(2) 6% would be apportioned for road and street purposes on the basis of population to cities of over 100,000 population according to the latest federal census figures.

(3) The remaining 44% would be placed in the State Road and Bridge Fund.

Very truly yours,
JAAB:mm J. A. A. BURNQUIST,
Attorney General

Soil tests available to Minnesota farmers through the University of Minnesota soil testing laboratory offer a means of evaluating plant food content of the soil according to Paul Burson, professor of soils at University Farm. Recommendations for one fertilizer nutrient are based on the presence of sufficient amounts of all other nutrients. Maximum benefits from any one nutrient can be obtained only if sufficient amounts of others are present.

• • • •

R. E. Rogde Princeton banker, backed up his interest in soil conservation with an unsolicited offer of a $100 cash donation to the Sherbune County Soil Conservation District for financing conservation demonstrations. District supervisors, announcing plans for using the funds, said, "We think of soil conservation as primarily the farmer's job, but others see its value too, as they know that soil conservation insures farm prosperity insures business prosperity."

• • • •

Leon C. Snyder, extension horticulturist at University Farm, recommends that to reduce erosion and build up the soil cultivated orchards should be planted now to a fall cover crop to be worked in next spring. Rye makes a good cover crop for winter and after a lush growth next spring will supply plenty of organic matter when it is worked in. It also helps harden the trees off and make them more resistant to winter injury.

• • • •

Soil testing can be done efficiently in the fall. Soil conditions are right for sampling; there is time to get good samples; and orders can be placed for fertilizer this fall so that you will have the kind needed in time for next spring.

Poor Risks

Chicks suffering from parasitic diseases and nutritional disorders are poor risks for vaccination. For this reason, the condition of the flock should be investigated before vaccination is attempted. IDEAS PAY DIVIDENDS IN MINNESOTA

(Editor's Note: This is another of the "Ideas Pay Dividends" case histories prepared by the Minnesota Department of Business Research and Development to stimulate interest in, and growth of, hometown employment.)

"Never underestimate the power of a woman" is the well known trade slogan of one of the nation's largest periodicals. During recent years women have been entering the business world in ever increasing numbers. Most of them have become associated with the trade and service fields but of late a considerable number have crossed over to the manufacturing side.

One of these is Mrs. Helen Elden, secretary-treasurer of the Den-Ricks Products, Inc. in Farmington. During World War II she and her husband were making plastic containers for ration coupons, but when the conflict ended their market collapsed and they were forced to turn their attention in other directions.

Mr. Ricks is a man of considerable inventive genius. After toying with a number of articles he finally came up with a wholly new product—a junior size pool table for home use. An eastern manufacturer, who had specialized in this type of pool table, did not resume operations after the war and the Eldens found a wide market. An empty broom factory in Farmington provided a location and they began operations by employing a small group of home folks on their assembly line.

Once more the women stole the spotlight. The Eldens discovered that, by and large, they were more stable, more particular and were faster operators, all of which gave them the low cost of production required.

Previous to her entry into the industrial field, Mrs. Elden spent 9 years in the office of one of the executives of the Minneapolis Star-Tribune. Because of her experience in handling people she assumed the responsibility of selling the factory output. Her success has been little short of phenomenal. Not only do leading toy and department stores sell this article, but 3 of the nation's mail order houses now catalogue the Den-Ricks line.

Pool tables are a seasonal item which has a much greater appeal to Christmas shoppers than to the summer trade. The Eldens are now looking for something which will warrant expansion of their plant, and the employment of more hometown folks. The success of their present venture into the industrial field would seem to indicate that they will find it.

"Spoiling Children"

Although many parents feel that they will "spoil" their children by responding to the slightest wail, an infant under four months or so needs so much close contact with his mother that his demands for handling or rocking should never be brushed aside. A sick baby, or one who has been hard to nourish properly, needs all the satisfaction and comfort possible.

Who Runs America?

the Congress? the President?

OR YOU AND THE MAN NEXT DOOR?

RUNNING AMERICA is the joint job of 150,000,000 people. It's the biggest job in the world today—keeping it running for liberty and for freedom. And the whole world's watching to see whether Americans can do it!

IN MUCH OF THE WORLD today, the people have resigned from running their own countries. Others have been quick to step in—first with promises of "security"—and then with whips and guns—to run things their way. The evidence is on every front page in the world, every day.

FREEDOM COMES UNDER ATTACK. The reality of war has made every American think hard about the things he's willing to work and fight for—and freedom leads the list.

But that freedom has been attacked here recently—just as it has been attacked in other parts of the world. One of the most serious threats to individual freedom has been the threat of Government-dominated Compulsory Health Insurance, falsely presented as a new guarantee of health "security" for everybody.

THE PEOPLE WEIGH THE FACTS. In the American manner, the people studied the case for Socialized Medicine—and the case against it.

They found that Government domination of the people's medical affairs under Compulsory Health Insurance means lower standards of medical care, higher payroll taxes, loss of incentive, damage to research, penalties for the provident, rewards for the improvident.

They found that no country on earth can surpass America's leadership in medical care and progress. They found that able doctors, teachers, nurses and scientists—working in laboratories where Science, not Politics, is master—are blazing dramatic new trails to health for Americans—and for the world.

THE "GRASS ROOTS" SIGNALS CONGRESS. In every community in the Nation, people stood up to be counted on this important issue. Thousands of local women's clubs, civic groups, farm, business, religious, taxpayer, medical, educational and patriotic organizations spoke out—giving the great United States Congress its unmistakable Grass Roots signal from home!

And ever watchful, ever sensitive to an alert people, The Congress saw that signal, and heard the people speak out, loud and plain. That's democracy in action. That's the American way!

Today among the 10,000 great organizations on militant public record against "Compulsory Health Insurance" are:

General Federation of Women's Clubs
American Farm Bureau Federation
National Grange
Veterans of Foreign Wars
National Conference of Catholic Charities
American Protestant Hospital Association
American Legion
National Association of Small Business Men
United States Chamber of Commerce
National Association of Retail Grocers
National Retail Dry Goods Association
American Bar Association

• Doctors of this Nation are grateful that the people refused to be wooed by the fantastic promises of this un-American excursion into State Socialism. • Doctors of America are dedicated to serve their fellow citizens at home and their comrades in uniform, wherever service to this Nation may take them. • And the thing they stand ready to fight for—to sacrifice for—to die for—is not the alien way of life of Socialism, but the prideful security of a free and self-reliant people!

THE VOLUNTARY WAY IS THE AMERICAN WAY!

• Throughout the Nation, free men and women, working and planning together, are finding the American answer to every question of medical service, care and cost. Hundreds of Voluntary Health Insurance Plans are in healthy competition—sponsored by doctors, insurance companies, hospitals, fraternal organizations—by industry, agriculture and labor. • Today in America—70 million people are protected by Voluntary Health Insurance! • Throughout the Nation, families are insuring themselves against the major costs of illness—at reasonable, budget-basis prices. Voluntary Health Insurance takes the economic shock out of illness. Protect your family now. • For information, ask your doctor—or your insurance man.

An American's greatest heritage is the right to learn the facts—and to speak his mind. Maintained with honor and used with sincerity—that right will guarantee forever that

Lemon-Ade

George Ade had finished his after-dinner speech at a gathering of notables, and when he had seated himself a well-known lawyer who was also an amateur wit, rose, shoved his hands deep into his trousers' pockets, as was his habit and laughingly inquired of those present:

"Doesn't it strike the company as a little unusual that a professional humorist should be funny?"

When the laugh had subsided, Ade drawled out:

"Doesn't it strike the company as a little unusual that a lawyer should have his hands in his own pockets?"

"It proves that there is nothing new under the sun. Just about the time the Chinese women are changing from trousers to skirts, ours are changing from skirts to trousers."

Cut That Out

It was the first wedding ceremony for the young minister and he was almost as bashful and embarrassed as the young couple before him. In a brave effort to round out the affair, the minister stammered:

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Truman Gives 8 Points for Peace; Reds Snap Defense Wall in North; New Wage Increases Are Reported

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

TRUMAN:

Statement of Policy

In an obvious attempt to erase some of the confusion that has developed around the American foreign policy since General MacArthur's statement on Formosa, President Truman made a report to the nation in which he stated eight aims of this country.

At the same time he announced plans for doubling American armed strength to nearly 3,000,000 men and asserted our productive capacity would be pushed to any degree necessary to attain a victory for freedom and the rule of law.

In his speech which was broadcast over a world-wide hookup, the President made it plain that a world war would not develop unless the Communists drove new puppets against the United Nations forces in Korea.

By this he meant, of course, Chinese Communists who have been reported as massing troops near the Korean border.

However, he made it plain that we would stay in the conflict if such a decision was made. He then attacked Russia for violating its pledges of international co-operation and preaching peace, but practicing aggression.

The eight points expounded in his speech:

1. We believe in the United Nations.
2. We believe Koreans have a right to be free.
3. We don't want the Korean fighting to expand into general war.
4. We particularly hope the Chinese people won't be misled into fighting the U.N. and the American people who still are their friends.
5. We want none of Asia, Formosa included, for ourselves.
6. We believe in freedom for all far eastern nations.
7. We do not believe in aggressive or preventive war.
8. We want peace and "we shall achieve it."

KOREA:

Stab at Taegu

North Korean forces, in the greatest advance in several weeks, broke through the northern U.N. defense wall and sent two columns of tanks and troops within a few miles of Kyangju, 12 miles south of Pohang.

From there the columns could swing west and stab at Taegu from the rear, or continue to push for Pusan some 50 miles to the south. It was the most serious threat to U.N. forces in a number of weeks. Military men were wondering if the Communists had the strength to exploit their penetration.

On all other fronts U.N. forces were holding or counter-attacking. In the northwest U.S. troops continued to root out Reds dug in on a 3,000-foot ridge 12 miles north of Taegu and smashed several Red attempts to cross the Naktong river.

On the south-central front U.N. forces further compressed the Red bridgehead across the Naktong near where it joins the Nam river.

In the southwest U. N. forces were back in old positions west of Maman and Mason after breaking up new red attacks. On this front the Communists reportedly lost 13,000 troops in four days.

In the air navy and air force planes continued to give close support to ground forces on all fronts, striking savagely with heavy explosives, rockets, napalm fire bombs and machine guns.

B-29's and B-26's continued to strike deep into Red territory.

LEWIS:

The Bear Growls

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, and known in some quarters as the unhappy bear in labor's ranks, has growled again. This time the victim was AFL President William Green.

Lewis told Green in no uncertain terms that his union would not be bound by a no-strike pledge during the war emergency.

He charged Green of bartering the rights of labor to appease his "innate craving for orthodox respectability" and added: "Restrict your pledges to your own outfit. We can do our own no-striking."

Some believed Lewis used this means of getting back at Green for not including the miners in unity talks between the AFL and the CIO.

EMPLOYMENT:

All-Time High

Employment in the United States was the greatest in the nation's history, the department of commerce reported with more than 62 million persons at work.

The only decrease noted in the entire employment picture was that of farm workers. A drop of 280,000 during the month, to 8,160,000, was reported.

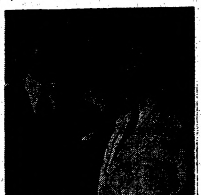
Conference



Chairman Millard Tydings (left), senate armed services committee, and house armed services Committee Chairman Carl Vinson, (right), are shown at the White House after conferring with President Truman on a new tank program which will cost an additional $500,000,000.

LABOR:

What's in the Future?

The Ford motor company tore up an unexpired contract with the United Automobile Workers and granted an immediate 8-cent-hourly cost-of-living wage increase. Previously, the Chrysler corporation had made a "voluntary" wage adjustment of 10 cents an hour. On top of this the White House announced the long dispute between the A.F.L. switchman's union and 10 western railroads had been settled with an agreement that gives the union a 23-cent-hourly wage boost.

With these facts in mind, economists are asking what's in the future for the American people? They came up with the immediate answer that it will force the nation into direct wage and price controls much sooner than would otherwise have occurred.

The Ford company's labor relations is always a pattern for the automobile industry. Other companies will follow this trend, most observers agreed.

Current hourly pay of the average automobile worker is estimated at $1.75. Rates for skilled craftsmen, such as tool and die makers, run about $2.50.

Most economists believed the new wage increases would be reflected in the price of automobiles within the near future.

Observers reported the over-all picture indicated a round of wage increases throughout the labor ranks. These increases in the past have been reflected in the cost of living in all fields.

Some economists, however, believe that as soon as the wage structure is equalized to make up for loss of purchasing power since Korea, the economy will go along on a plateau.

JOHNSON:

Refuses to Resign

Defense Secretary Louis Johnson, under fire from many quarters to resign but still backed by President Truman, flatly rejected a demand for his resignation and said he had "no apology" for his record as chief of the nation's military forces.

In his unusual statement Johnson said many of the attacks on both him and Acheson were "primarily political" and were leveled "with an eye to the November election."

He likened himself to the late Defense Secretary Forrestal who broke down after repeated attacks by critics and later jumped to his death.

He said he was sure he still enjoyed the confidence of the President and the public and that "in the long run the solid facts of what the department of defense is accomplishing will stand out above the misinformation that various individuals and various groups, for reasons of their own, see fit to spread."

Among other things, Johnson has been accused of promoting a defensive war and working against the policies of the state department. Criticism of Johnson has been forthcoming from both Democrats and Republicans.

Casualties

A total of 6,886 Korean war casualties were reported by the defense department as the conflict got well into its third month. The total, however, did not include those suffered during the latest big Communist push.

The total included 443 killed in action, 3889 wounded, and 2,436 missing in action. The summary said 60 wounded have been returned to duty.

MANPOWER:

Doctors and Fathers

Thousands of men who had looked upon the draft as something remote, a mere possibility in the dim future, suddenly found themselves face to face with the probability of being in the armed forces.

The house armed services committee announced the draft would be extended to draft-age married men with dependents. Officials estimated there are 1,000,000 married nonveterans of draft age—19 through 25—and that up to 400,000 would qualify for induction.

Meanwhile, a senate house group reached a compromise on a bill to draft doctors and dentists through age 50. The bill upon which the conferees agreed is designed to put into uniform 5,600 doctors and 3,000 dentists who were trained at government expense during World War II.

Few doctors or dentists actually are expected to be drafted. Military officials are confident the threat of a draft will swell the ranks of volunteers. An added inducement is the fact that volunteers will get $100-a-month bonus while draftees will not. Doctors could be drafted with the rank of private; volunteers, would get at least a lieutenant's commission.

Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, director of national selective service, reported that nearly three out of five candidates for military service are being rejected.

SPY-WEARY HOUSE:

Votes Red Curbs

The house had approved by a roll-call vote of 354 to 20 a bill which subjects American Communists to heavy curbs, and the senate was expected to approve a similar bill.

The measure is unusual on the American scene in that it would force a political party to register its many fronts (organizations). It goes even further and would compel them to label their propaganda and deny them defense jobs, bar them from government employment, and deny them the right to travel abroad.

President Truman is reported to disapprove of the legislation on the grounds that it might impair traditional American liberties. From a technical viewpoint such legislation if applied to one party could be applied to another and thus restricts the individual's political and civil liberties.

According to the FBI, the legislation will hit about 550,000 Communists and fellow travelers. J. Edgar Hoover, director of the FBI, in a recent report estimated there are about 50,000 Communists and 10 times that many sympathizers in the United States.

DEWEY:

All-Out Attack

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, who was as dead as a fried mackerel — politically speaking — after his recent announcement that he was retiring, is back in the limelight. Dewey announced he would seek a third term as governor of New York.

His return to the ring would indicate the Republicans have found an issue. In his own words: "We will not survive this crisis (the Korean conflict) unless we have a strong and constructive opposition party to force correction of the errors and incompetence of the national administration and to compel it to take a larger view of our dangers and more effective action to meet them."

Political observers reported there can be no doubt now as to what campaign issues the Republicans will expound this fall. On all fronts it will be a sharp attack on President Truman's conduct of the Korean war.

Mistaken

Ex-New Dealer Lee Pressman, (above) admitted onetime Communist, in testimony before a house committee named three other government employees who were Communists in 1934 and 1935. Now Pressman says he feels he made a "mistake" by joining the Communist party and that he has cut all connections with them.

FORMOSA:

Confusion Increases

New confusion has been added to the Formosa question with President Truman's statement that it would no longer be necessary to keep the U.S. seventh fleet off Formosa once peace has been settled in the Korean war.

No one seems sure just what President Truman means. On the surface the statement would seem premature and adds to existing confusion.

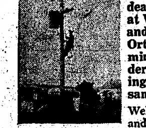
Otter Tales

By . . . Reddy Kilowatt

A monthly column of news and information published by Otter Tail Power Company, Fergus Falls, Minnesota

This is the story of a cat who came to breakfast and stayed to cause trouble. It happened at Ortley, South Dakota, one morning not long ago. This particular cat scurried up a power pole to get a fine fat bird he saw sitting there. As he jumped across the transformer hanger, his tail contacted a live wire. And that was the end of the cat—but just the beginning of my trouble.



The short blew a fuse and the line went dead. Omar Jensen, local superintendent at Waubay, hurried out as fast as he could and fixed the trouble (see cut). Meanwhile Ortley was without electricity for forty minutes. I spent that forty minutes wondering what the Ortley folks were thinking about. They probably called me the same things I called that cat!

Well, there are some things you can't prevent and I guess we'll never be able to make cats understand that they lose nine lives all at once when they get friendly with a live wire. But there is one thing that can be prevented . . . that's FIRE.

This week, October 8 to 14, is Fire Prevention Week. Lots of things cause fires; on farms, for instance, 37 per cent of them are caused by lightning. But an equally serious fire hazard is faulty electric wiring. Many homes need an extra circuit to eliminate the danger of fire caused by overloading present wiring. This is a good week to have the wiring in your home checked over carefully to make sure it's adequate.

Fire Prevention Week isn't the only event that makes October important. This is the month most of us will be asked to give to worthwhile charities—the Community Chest. October is also the month—71 years ago—that Edison invented the electric light.

And last week was National Newspaper Week, set aside to recognize the honest, hardworking, intelligent people who publish this newspaper and thousands like it all over the country. I like their 1950 slogan: "American Newspapers . . . TRUTH TO A FREE PEOPLE."

Truth is getting more difficult to find but you can still find it in America—the same place where you find the free people. A lot of thanks for this is owed to newspaper men and women—who are diligently trying to preserve our liberties.

It's encouraging to know that the doctors of America are also waging a fight to keep their freedom—and yours and mine as well. (There may be an ad run by your local doctors in the same issue of this paper. Be sure to read it.) The doctors are fighting socialized medicine, and in so doing they are fighting your fight and my fight, too—against government running our businesses and our private lives.
